

Sandbridge resident charges

'There are no sand dunes in Sandbridge left to protect'

By Cathy LeCompte

Editor

Many Sandbridge residents, city officials and experts in beach erosion got the chance to let legislators know where they stand on House Bill 1769, last week at a public hearing held in Virginia Beach City Council chambers.

House Bill 1769 is an act to amend the Coastal Primary Sand Dune Protection Act, to allow eight Sandbridge residents to construct protective bulkheads on their beach property.

A House of Delegates subcommittee heard testimonies from about 25 people, addressing many sides of the issue. The subcommittee members were: Chair V. Thomas Forehand, Chesapeake; C. Hardaway Marks, Hopewell; John B. Dicks, III, Chesterfield; W. Henry Maxwell, Newport News; and G. Steven Agee, Salem.

Bob Mathias, representing the city of Virginia Beach, presented background information on the events over the past few years leading up to the drafting of House Bill 1769. Mathias said that the Sandbridge residents had first applied in 1983 to the Virginia Beach Wetlands Board to build the bulkheads on their property.

After research by the Army Corps of Engineers and other concerns concluded that bulkheads accelerate erosion, the Wetlands Board voted 3-2 to deny the permits to build bulkheads.

The "Sandbridge Eight" kept pursuing the matter until the bill was approved in the Virginia General Assembly in March.

Mathias said, "The city still opposes the legislation."

Robert W. Winstead, a Sandbridge resident since 1977, said that when he first moved there, the sand dunes stretched out 50 feet toward the ocean from his house. Today, the dunes are gone and he has had to have the sand replaced seven times at a cost of $1,000.

Another Sandbridge resident, Michael Bogese, said that calling the legislation a bill to protect sand dunes in Sandbridge is a misnomer.

"There are no sand dunes in Sandbridge left to protect," he said.

Bogese also said that the only people protecting sand dunes in Sandbridge are the residents themselves. The cost to construct the protective bulkheads allowed by House Bill 1769 may cost each resident $30,000.

One alternative to bulkheading alone, that was suggested by Bob Mathias, was sand replenishment along with bulkheading. When asked if he would be willing to nourish the beach with sand in addition to putting up the bulkheading, Bogese said he would want the money for that to come from public, rather than private funds.

"The bulkheading is to protect lives and private property," he said. "It's a public beach. When I go down to the beach in front of my house, there are 50 to 100 people on the beach. It's not a private beach."

Sharon Adams, a spokesperson for the Virginia League of Women Voters, sided with the city in opposing the legislation. Adams said that research she has read maintains that not only does bulkheading accelerate the erosion process, but it also damages the delicate marine ecosystem.

Cancer Society to fill mile with quarters

The American Cancer Society will attempt to fill a mile with quarters on the Virginia Beach Boardwalk, on Saturday, Aug. 10 at 18th Street beginning at 11 a.m. It is expected to be complete at the end of 32nd Street at 7 p.m.

Volunteers will be available at each block to place the donated quarters on a specially designed ribbon.

Continuous entertainment will be provided at the half-way mark, 25th Street. Free skin cancer screening will be conducted from 12-4 p.m. Information on the signs and symptoms of skin cancer can be obtained at the event.

The "Mile of Quarters," a spokesman said, will be used to further cancer research programs.

Boardsailing experiences new wave of popularity

The increasing popularity of boardsailing or windsurfing is taking the country by storm and Virginia Beach is no exception.

This past weekend, the third leg of the Subaru HiFly Boardsailing Series took place in Virginia Beach at 57th Street and the oceanfront.

Saturday's events featured a clinic on boardsailing techniques by champion boardsailor Andrea Livingston.

Livingston took a bronze medal in the 1984 Summer Olympics in the boardsailing triathlon, which consists of a slalom race, a long-distance race and a freestyle event. She also won the freestyle competition. It was the events Olympic debut.

Livingston explained that the freestyle event is similar to a

"I do a lot of trick moves and a choreographed routine set to music," said Livingston.

"Judging is based on the degree of difficulty of each move."

Due to the rough surf conditions, Livingston's performance of her freestyle expertise was moved to the lake at Mount Trashmore. Livingston and three other members of the Subaru team performed a synchronized sailing demonstration.

Although Livingston still competes, she says she now enjoys demonstrating her skills.

"I enjoy teaching and performing a lot better than competing," she said.

The Subaru HiFly event is in its second year and will visit 12 cities in 1985.

Board spending questioned, tougher guidelines offered

By Cathy LeCompte

Editor

The Virginia Beach School Board's compliance with state and city travel and entertainment expense reimbursement procedures was discussed at a special board meeting Thursday.

Fred G. Benham, assistant superintendent for financial services, presented the board with a 56-page report detailing board travel and expense practices, as compared with state and city guidelines.

The special meeting was called after published reports questioned the board's spending procedures.

In a letter to School Board Chairman Roy A. Woods, Benham wrote, "To the best of my knowledge, all appropriate sections of the Code of Virginia (and appropriate city ordinances) have been followed in both spirit and letter."

Benham said the school's records are audited every year by accountants hired by City Council.

David W. Edmondson, an auditor whose firm has reviewed school financial records for several years, said his firm found no major irregularities in school records in the past 10 years.

School Board member John A. Fahey concurred, saying that he has spot checked school invoices from time to time.

"I've checked the invoices over the years and found the system (in Benham's department) to be very good," Fahey said.

Fahey called for tougher board policies in reimbursement for entertainment. State law doesn't specifically mention entertainment.

The guidelines on travel for state employees say that entertainment is a personal expense.

"I just don't see public funds being used for that," Fahey said. "Should we charge the public for members to go see The Oak Ridge Boys?"

Other School Board members Robert H. Callis, Jr. and Rev. B. G. Campbell said that many times the entertainment is part of the conference and can't be separated.

Benham said, "In my opinion, if the activity is related to the benefit of the conference, then I would reimburse it."

Benham contacted other school divisions to find out if they reimburse for conference entertainment and found that they did.

The main concern, according to Benham, is whether the Virginia Beach School Board is consistent with what other similar governing bodies do.

"I'm concerned with consistency," he said. "What do other school boards, the city, the state, the IRS, private industry... what do they do?"

In Virginia, school boards are exempt from certain portions of the code for State Travel Regulations. Therefore, the board will have to develop its own guidelines, as it considers itself an independent agency.

Dr. Woods said the issue of travel reimbursement would be discussed at a later meeting.

Board member Robert W. Clyburn said, "We've been publicly criticized. If the legalities consider this (entertainment reimbursement) wrong, see SCHOOL, page 3

Garbage collection to increase

By Lee Cahill

City Council Reporter

It looks as though Virginia Beach residents will have twice-a-week garbage collection in the summer starting on July 1 of next year.

Although no decision has been made yet, City Council Monday afternoon at a work session generally agreed that the city should reestablish twice-a-week collections in the summer, that an automated garbage pick-up system will be phased in and that the city would absorb the cost of the additional garbage pick-up.

Alternatives have been to increase the real estate tax rate or to charge a user fee to pay for the additional cost.

The total annual cost for the twice-weekly summer pick-up program would be $9.66 million which equates to 9.3 cents per $100 on the basis of the real estate tax rate.

The difference between the present once-a-week service and the proposed twice-a-week in the summer service would be $1.3 million the first year rising to $2.6 million by 1992-93.

In contrast year-round twice-weekly service would add $2.5 million to the annual city budget.

E. Dean Block, assistant city manager, presented a report to Council on options on the garbage collection service level.

Whether twice-a-week year-round refuse collection or summer-only twice weekly collection is adopted the city will be faced with an up front cost of $725,000 in addition to the projected annual costs.

Increasing the level of service would hasten the city's changeover from a manual to automated garbage collection system from six years to four or five years.

Under the once-weekly system the city expected to have 20 automated trucks in operation by July 1, 1986 and 44 regular trucks. With a year-round twice weekly system the city would have to purchase 48 more trucks in addition to the 44 regular trucks, and with twice-weekly

Who's responsible

Many organizations now exist to fight one of our nation's biggest problems, drunk driving. The steps these organizations have taken to combat this problem have been good ones. They have sought stricter punishments for the drunken driver.

Recently, the question has been raised about whether the establishments where these people go to do their drinking are legally responsible for their drinking patrons. A Virginia Beach family is suing a Virginia Beach tavern and the driver for $1 million in damages after their daughter was killed by the intoxicated driver.

With the heightened awareness of the detriments of drunken driving, many bars and taverns have joined in the fight, by not advocating over-drinking, cutting back on happy hours, having machines to test for alcohol content on the premises, and serving food and alternative beverages when ever possible. The reputable businesses don't want to contribute to the problems, but they still want to make a living.

Can you hold a restaurant responsible for your bloated stomach when you eat too much? Just because they offer a salad bar that says "all you can eat," it doesn't make them responsible when you gorge yourself.

By the same token, a bar cannot be the conscience of each of its patrons. Bars are not in the habit of offering "all you can drink" specials, primarily because they know that many people will abuse the opportunity and cause them to lose money. When a person becomes an adult and can legally walk into a bar, he/she, not the bar, is responsible for the alcohol consumed.

While I realize that eating too much will not affect one's performance behind the wheel of a car as seriously as drinking too much alcohol, the principle of where the responsibility lies is the same. If the bar is willfully forcing more alcohol on a patron who is obviously beyond his limit, the story is different.

If the trend toward holding establishments responsible for drunken patrons continues another problem presents itself.

Consider this scenario: I go to Bar A and spend four hours there drinking. I have approximately eight drinks. Then, I walk next door to Bar B and have a glass of wine and some dinner. I do not appear intoxicated when I leave Bar B, but I get into my car, get involved in an accident and injure someone. Which bar does the injured party sue? Or do they sue both of them?

According to the scenario, I got drunk at Bar A, but I was last seen coming out of Bar B, and maybe no one knows I was even in Bar A. Is Bar B responsible for finding out where I've been and how much I drank before I came there?

It is virtually impossible for the employees at the bar to keep watch on all the customers. I've seen them exercise their right to discontinue serving patrons who drank too much and therefore, might have a tendency to get rowdy. By and large, even though the more the public drinks, the more money they make, taverns will not advocate drinking too much, or drinking and driving. If enough taverns are sued, they'll establish a two drink maximum. Then, people will be back to drinking in their cars. And the drunk driving problem will still exist.

Drunken drivers will continue to kill, but the victims' families will only have the drivers to blame.

—C.L.

Happy birthday to freedom of press

We have enjoyed enormous freedoms here in America for many years.

One of the most important of those liberties, if we can indeed set one apart from the others, is freedom of the press.

An historic case involving John Peter Zenger occurred 250 years ago this week. We journalists have him and the founding fathers to thank for the freedom we enjoy.

Thomas Jefferson once wrote "...were it left for me to decide whether we should have a government without newspapers, or newspapers without a government, I should not hesitate a moment to prefer the latter."

Thanks, Mr. Jefferson and Mr. Zenger.

More respect for tourists needed

Editor, Virginia Beach Sun:

I am currently spending my first vacation in your city, and for the life of me I cannot understand what is so great about Virginia Beach. Sure, it would be wonderful to have miles of uninterrupted shoreline, if...

...there was not as much trash and garbage lying around on said sandy shores, presenting danger to unarmed feet everywhere;

...the swimming areas were not almost entirely infested with these disgusting and painful jelly fish;

...the streets were not so crowded it becomes a literal matter of life and death to cross them with small children in tow; and

...residents were not so high and mighty to look down on us tourists, who, after all, contribute healthy shares to your economy.

Virginia Beach is the place my parents came to during their honeymoon 34 years ago. Now, I am not so naive to think nothing would change in those intervening years, but enough is enough already. Surely, something could have been preserved for what I believe is your largest industry (tourism). What I see bares no resemblance to the pictures painted in my mind so long ago.

Sincerely,
Vernon Mann

Historic case remembered

By Lillian B. Youell
Special to the Sun

Two hundred and fifty years ago this week, August 4, 1735, a trial took place in New York City that was to become a landmark case. In colonial days, freedom of speech and of the press was not the rule in America, but this trial opened the door for reform of the law of libel, became a foundation stone for freedom of the press and was a victory of popular will over tyrannical government.

Thirteen-year-old John Peter Zenger arrived in New York with his German parents in 1710. He soon became an apprentice to William Bradford, the official printer for the colonial government. After he learned the trade, he married and moved to Maryland. When his first wife died, he returned to New York and for a brief period worked in partnership with his former teacher who began publishing the New York Gazette in October of 1725 as the voice of the government. The next year, Zenger established his own print shop.

Great dissension had grown from a dispute between the Governor of New York and New Jersey and the "acting" Governor, William Cosby had been appointed governor of the two colonies in 1731 but had remained in England until the following year. During the inter-

Actress obsessed with lions

Once you accept the idea that the people in this book are crazy or at least totally obsessed, it's easy to become completely engrossed in the story of big cats and humans learning to live together. "The Cats of Shambala" by Tippi Hedren is the story of a dream, to make a movie featuring a pride of lions, and how following such a dream can totally engulf an individual, a couple and an entire family.

In 1969 actress Tippi Hedren and her husband Noel Marshall were in Africa making a film when they became entranced with a pride of lions which were living in an abandoned house. They felt that a story about these lions interacting with the scientist and his family would make a movie and they promptly proceeded to make plans to produce such a film.

They soon discovered that it would be impossible to force 20 or 30 lions to live together if they had not grown up together or if

The Marshalls did not let this information dissuade them from making the film. They decided to create their own lion acting ensemble and began acquiring lion cubs and raising them in their Sherman Oaks home, at least until the neighbors complained.

Eventually, to house their growing menagerie they brought a large track of land in Soledad Canyon in which they recreated the African plains. Years passed and gradually they acquired and raised over 70 lions and 26 tigers; assorted cougars, black panthers, leopards, and jaguars; plus two elephants.

The film venture was fraught with disaster. Investors for the film were difficult to find, and

They were not familiar with each other. Furthermore, if human actors were to interact with the cats with some semblance of safety the lions needed human contact from the time they were cubs. There were few lions in captivity that met these criteria.

LeCompte's Comments

Music to my ears

It's true what they say: one person's music is another person's noise.

I realize this more all the time as I find people around me who come from vastly different backgrounds and who differ from me in age.

The other day at the office, the strains of classical music were coming from a co-worker's radio. It was about 10 a.m. Later in the day, he mentioned that he liked to listen to instrumental music during the day, while he was trying to work, because songs with words distracted him.

I'm not big on classical music anyway and songs with words don't bother me. In fact, I like to have a radio on when I'm working. I used to wear my Walkman radio around the office. The bad thing about those radios is that you can't hear how loud you're singing and it always sounds like you're completely in tune with whoever's on the radio, even when you know you can't carry a tune in a hot water bucket! I think my co-workers are glad I gave up the Walkman.

Music is always one of those subjects that people talk about to see if they can find common ground. At college, after the standard "What's your major" and "Where are you from" questions, the subject of music always came up.

Sometimes, when I felt like being smart, which was quite often, I'd make up some group name when a guy asked me what my favorite band was. I'd say, "Oh I'm really into the Fuzzy Earrings right now." Then if he said that he liked them too, I'd know he was a real loser.

When I first came down here to college, I listened to FM 99 faithfully. And I can still handle it sometimes, but only at night. I got tired of having my eardrums cracked by Henry the Bull in the morning. He's O.K., but he just gets carried away sometimes. He's great with song parodies, I have to give him that.

Now I listen to AM 1230, FM 99's sister station on the AM dial. They play what is known as classic rock 'n roll or oldies music. I was 2 years old when the Beatles first came to America in 1964. So you're probably thinking, why does she like that music so much. Well, I can't really answer that question. I don't know why I love oldies, I only know that I do.

When I was in elementary school, I listened to my mom's old Elvis 45's. I didn't really know what songs were popular because I was always listening to old records. Then, when I was about 12, my best friend and I discovered the Beatles again. We started listening to my brother's old Beatles records and I've been a fan since. I've seen the Beatles "sound alike" group "1964" at the Boat-house twice, and they were great. I could almost imagine what it would have been like to be a teenager in 1964.

There is only one kind of music that I seriously cannot deal with and that's country. I've tried to have an open mind. I've even gone to a big, country bar in Virginia Beach that shall remain nameless and I just can't stomach it. A couple of the country singers are O.K. I can handle Willie Nelson. But the majority is really bad, in my opinion.

I think that anybody could write the words to a country music song. If a man is singing it, just write a lot about drinking beer and missing that sweet honey in them tight flitin' blue jeans and you've got a hit. If a woman is going to sing it, write about how much she loves that man who's drinking beer and going home to his wife, while she's sleeping all alone in that big, old double bed, and it's top 10 for sure. The scenario is always the same. The men just drink beer and cheat on their wives and the women stay at home and pine away. Sounds too much like real life to me. Music should be an escape from the depressing facts of life.

Of course, some of the more modern songs that are on the pop charts today aren't exactly awe inspiring lyrically, either. I'm really sick of seeing those T-shirts with lyrics from Frankie Goes to Hollywood. The man is obviously illiterate if his songs say, "Frankie say stop war." Give me a break! But I still like my MTV!

Arris to serve on board

Daniel Arris has won a seat on the Planning Commission over two other nominees.

Arris received the votes of eight council members Monday afternoon to fill the unexpired term of Harold Graham who died recently.

Councilwoman Meyera Oberndorf submitted the name of his widow, Peggy Graham, for nomination. However, Graham received only two votes, from Oberndorf and Barbara Henley.

The third candidate was Ernest Lendman who received the vote of H. Jack Jennings Jr.

Arris, who was nominated by Councilman Robert Fentress, Beach Borough councilman, is from the Kempville Borough.

Bulkheads discussed

Sandbridge was not the only Virginia Beach neighborhood heavily represented at the public hearing. Several Ocean Park residents addressed the issue of erosion in their community at the Lynnhaven Inlet.

Dr. James S. Berger said there is no beach left at flood tide near his residence.

"The naturally occurring loss of sand has been accelerated by the dredging of the Lynnhaven Inlet," Berger said.

Another Ocean Park resident, William K. Jenkins, appealed to the committee to consider that neighborhood in its erosion study plans as well.

"There has been a loss of 12 to 13 feet of sand at the Chesapeake House (On the Bay) condominiums where I live," he said.

shooting closed down several times when money ran out. The cats were struck with a deadly virus, the compound was ravished by floods and wild fire and there was always the unpredictability of even the sweetest-tempered cat. Injuries were commonplace and none of the human actors on the film escaped unharmed.

The final product, a film called "Roar" was not a critical or financial success, although the wildlife photography was innovative and received much praise.

summer only collections, the city would use the same number of trucks in the summer as those used in the year-round twice weekly service, but would need only 29 regular trucks with 31 automated trucks in the winter.

With increased service the city would have to purchase 28 more new trucks than it has planned to purchase under the present system.

The summer collections would be established for the period between Memorial Day and Labor Day. However, during the first year of operation in 1986, the additional service would be started on July 1 unless the city is willing to add to the costs projected by the staff.

One of the biggest drawbacks in the summer-only system will be the necessity to hire summer help.

Initially, the staff plans to recruit truck drivers from the regular employees and return them to their regular jobs at the end of the summer. Councilman John A. Baum suggested that the summer jobs could be filled by college students on vacation.

City Manager Thomas H. Muehlenbeck agreed that some jobs will be lost with automation but some summer jobs will be added with twice-a-week collections.

Under the automated system, the city will furnish the residents with standard garbage receptacles which can be picked up automatically by the specially designed trucks. To meet the July 1, 1986 start up date the city would have to purchase 38 trucks under lease purchase agreements, and $42,000 containers also under lease purchase agreements.

then I'd be willing to give the money back to the city."

Other board members were also critical of the Council of Civic Organizations for calling for the special audit of the school's finances, saying that the audit would probably cost more than all the school board travel.

Board member William M. Gunter said, "I think the people who go around saying let's do this and let's do that should be aware of the cost involved and who's going to pay for it."

Benham concluded his report saying, "The board has been depicted by some people as being less than fiscally responsible and that disturbs me."

The Virginia Beach Arts Center took legal ownership of the Sajo Manor property recently, as R. G. Moore and his wife Francis presented the deed to Bob Callis, Jr., chairman of the Arts Center's Capitol Campaign Committee.

The property, valued at $700,000, is located off Northampton Boulevard and Diamond Springs Road.

Sale of the estate is expected to bring the Arts Center close to its goal of $6 million for a new facility planned in the resort area.

If funding materializes, the groundbreaking for the new facility would take place in the spring of 1986 and take 20 months to complete.

ABE program gets federal grant

By Cathy LeCompte

Editor

The Adult Basic Education program of the Virginia Beach Public Schools has received a $13,333 grant from the State Department of Education for a special project to benefit school classified employees.

The purpose of the project is to provide instruction for classified employees in the Virginia Beach school system who function below the fourth-grade level in the areas of reading and math, according to project coordinator Juanita Frink. Classified employees are those involved in building and ground maintenance, custodial work and cafeteria work, for example.

The school system originally requested over $38,000 for the project, but only $13,333 was approved by the state. The grant will run from July 1, 1985 to June 30, 1986.

Frink said that because they did not receive the full funding amount requested, the project will be trimmed down.

"We'll still be able to do what we set out to do, just on a smaller scale," Frink said. "We wanted to offer instruction at more than one site, but now we will only choose one site."

The Adult Education Service did a survey to find classified employees who would be interested in this type of program. Frink said that from the information they have gathered about 35-40 people will be served.

"There might be more interested after the project gets under way," Frink said.

The instruction won't begin until October. They anticipate hiring two instructors qualified in adult basic education. Curriculum planning will take place in August and September.

The characteristic that sets this project apart from the other services offered in Adult Basic Education, is that this instruction is more job-related. The courses will focus on the basic reading, math and English skills that will benefit participants in their jobs.

"One thing that makes it different is that we'll be dealing with the terminology basic to their job performance," said James R. Darden, planning and resource specialist for the Adult Education Service for Virginia Beach Public Schools. "The other adult education classes we have are geared toward them getting their high school diploma."

The location for the course offerings has not yet been determined.

The classes will be offered during the day and the school system will allow release time for the participants to attend.

"The school will donate two hours a week and the person will donate two hours a week," said Darden.

The program will serve as a model for job-related ABE programs in local businesses and industries. Adult Education Services anticipates success which will benefit not only the participants, but the school system as well.

"People will eventually be more productive in the performance of their jobs," Darden said.

Landmark Zenger case sets legal precedent

val Rip Van Dam, the senior member of the Governor's Council in New York, had served as "acting" Governor. When Cosby arrived in New York, he demanded that Van Dam turn over the stipend he had received from the colonial legislature for his service.

When Van Dam refused, Cosby declared the colonial Supreme Court a court of equity and proceeded to sue Van Dam. This tactic avoided the use of a jury of hostile colonials. When one of the three Justices of the Supreme Court of New York refused to cooperate, arguing that the Governor had no authority to create such a court, Cosby removed Chief Justice Lewis Morris from office.

At this point, Morris and other leaders who opposed Cosby decided to establish a newspaper which could mobilize public opinion. The only printer available was Zenger, who courageously agreed to publish an opposition newspaper. Thus was born the New York Weekly Journal, perhaps the first politically independent newspaper in America.

The first issue hit the streets

November 5, 1733 and the little four page paper became an instant success. Zenger's business flourished. But one year later he was arrested because of the sharp attacks on the colonial government which appeared in his newspaper.

Ironically, Zenger did not write these articles. Everyone knew that the real editor was James Alexander, who had served as chief attorney to Van Dam and was a leading figure in the opposition party. However, neither he nor others who wrote for the paper used their real names. As publisher Zenger was responsible.

The third issue of the newspaper contained this manifesto on press freedom:

"The loss of liberty in general would soon follow the suppression of the liberty of the press; for it is an essential branch of liberty, so perhaps it is the best preservative of the whole. Even a restraint of the press would have a fatal influence. No nation can exist or modern ever lost the liberty of freely speaking, writing, or publishing their sentiments, but forthwith lost their liberty in general and became slaves."

The NYWJ pointed out acts by the administration that deprived the colonists of their freedom. Finally Governor Cosby issued a Proclamation condemning the "scandalous, virulent, false and seditious reflections" on his administration. On November 17, 1734 John Peter Zenger was arrested and charged with seditious libel.

Finally the trial opened in New York on August 4, 1735. Governor Cosby had seen that Zenger's attorneys were disbarred and had handpicked Chief Justice James De Lancey as well as Attorney General Richard Bradley who would serve as Prosecutor.

Zenger was charged with criminal libel. This is a more serious charge than the usual civil variety as it involves imprisonment and a fine following conviction. Amazingly, the second time this charge has been invoked in New York City since Zenger's time was as recently as 1963.

Fortunately for Zenger, Andrew Hamilton, one of the most respected attorneys in the colonies and an elder statesman at the age of 80, came from Philadelphia to defend Zenger.

Hamilton said, "The question before the Court...is not a small or private concern; it is not the cause of a poor printer, nor of New York alone...It is the cause of liberty and I make no doubt...but every man who prefers freedom to a life of slavery will bless and honor you as men who have baffled the attempt of tyranny; and by an impartial and uncorrupt verdict, have laid a noble foundation for securing to ourselves, our posterity and our neighbors that to which nature and the laws of our country have given us a right - the liberty - both of exposing and opposing arbitrary power by speaking and writing truth."

The Jury met briefly and the Foreman announced "Not guilty." Although the decision was contrary to existing law and not accepted by other royal judges, in time it set a precedent in libel suits. It had an effect on the events leading to the revolt against the Mother Country for Hamilton had articulated the feelings among the colonists concerning the relationship between a government and its citizens.

Police seek school vandal

Virginia Beach Crime Solvers and the Virginia Beach School Administration have combined funds and are offering a cash reward of up to $3,500 for information that leads to the arrest of those responsible for the June 24th explosion at a local high school.

On that Monday between 3 p.m. and 7:30 p.m., someone entered the chemistry lab at Kempsville High School located at 574 Kempsville Road and turned on the propane gas jets. At 7:30 p.m., the gas ignited and caused damages in excess of $200,000 to the building and its contents.

A white, male juvenile wearing a white T-shirt and blue jeans was seen by approaching firefighters, jumping from the roof at the front of the school and running away.

If you have any information concerning this crime or any arson case, call Crime Solvers at 427-0000.

Crimes Solvers also will pay up to $1,000 for information about any crime or wanted person and for information leading to the recovery of drugs or stolen property. You never have to give your name to be eligible for the reward.

PUBLIC NOTICE
NEGOTIATIONS STARTED FOR VIRGINIA BEACH
BOULEVARD

The Virginia Department of Highways and Transportation announced that negotiations for the rights of way on Virginia Beach Boulevard were initiated on July 23, 1985. The proposed improvement will extend from 0.017 Miles E. North Rosemont Road To: 0.270 Miles E. North Great Neck Road. Those persons that must be relocated due to this project have been initially contacted by the Department's Right of Way Agents in connection with its relocation assistance program.

In order to qualify for moving costs and possible replacement housing payments, the property must be acquired by the State. If, however, any occupant is presently contemplating moving, he should so notify the District Relocation Agent in charge at:

Virginia Department of Highways and Transportation
P. O. Box 1070
Suffolk, Virginia 23434
Phone: 539-8701

This will insure eligibility for moving expenses, and replacement housing payments.

A relocation office has been established at District Headquarters, Pruden Boulevard, Suffolk to assist the affected occupants in finding new quarters and explaining the eligibility requirements to receive applicable payments. The office will be open Monday through Friday from 8:15 A.M. to 5:00 P.M. A comprehensive brochure describing the relocation program can be obtained at this office or through the District Relocation Agent. The construction authorization for this project will not be granted until the Department is satisfied that there is sufficient decent, safe and sanitary housing in the area available to the families and that they have been informed of its availability. Also the Department must be satisfied that supplemental payments, if any, have been made available, that the affected occupants have received sufficient time to obtain possession of housing which is within their financial means, and that replacement housing is open and fair to all persons regardless of race, color religion, sex or national origin.

The Virginia Department of Highways and Transportation anticipates that all families and businesses will be relocated in approximately 15 to 16 months.

Council approves $60 million IRB's

A total of $60,465 million in Industrial Revenue Bonds, including a $20 million housing bond, have been approved by City Council.

However, only two entities seeking to borrow $1.9 million in no-interest money have any assurances that they will be covered by allocations. The $1.9 million is included in the local allocation, which is now exhausted. The remaining bonds would have to come out of the State surplus allocation.

Council considers Gen. Booth plan

City Council has scheduled consideration of an ordinance for regarding the commercial strategy in the General Booth Boulevard area for Aug. 26, a night meeting.

The ordinance has been deferred several times. When the Comprehensive Plan was approved earlier in the year, a decision on commercial development was left out for want of a clear-cut strategy. The proposed ordinance, if approved, will be included in the Comprehensive Plan for the Courthouse-Sandbridge Study Area.

Ramada hotel plans expansion

The expansion of the Ramada Oceanside Tower at 57th Street and Oceanfront will be completed and ready for guests in September.

Progress made in Back Bay, says Baum

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

The city has made more progress than people think, according to Councilman John A. Baum.

Baum spoke in connection with a report on the Back Bay Watershed Management Plan, but his reference was to planning for the rural area of the city.

He said that "we really have held the green line" in contrast to the City of Chesapeake which has no green line and has permitted leapfrog developments in the rural areas. He said that the area south of Great Bridge has numerous farmettes (three-acre homesites) developed with septic tanks. He said that septic tanks are needed for rural areas, but when they are clustered they eventually end up with failures.

He said that Chesapeake has been liberal on development in rural areas and that it bothered him to read the statements by Chesapeake citizens critical of development in Virginia Beach.

Baum also said that the rural residents of Virginia Beach are not in favor of a smaller Council size. The size of council is one of the issues being considered by a committee studying city organization. At present rural areas are represented on Council through the borough system.

Some critics of the system have maintained that the system gives the rural area representation disproportionate to its population.

Jack Whitney, a city planner working the Back Bay Committee, said that of the 40 recommendations made by the committee, 18 have been given high priority, and of these 18, nine have been implemented in whole or in part.

The committee consists of Councilwoman Barbara Henley, Councilman Baum and Public Works Director Oral Lambert.

Progress on some of the high priority items is as follows:

- Retain existing zoning in Back Bay watershed. This is done through denial of rezoning applications by the Planning Commission and City Council.

- Maintain current capital improvement schedule for Back Bay and North Landing River watersheds. The police should be adopted for the development of future capital improvement programs.

- Require certification by developers in Back Bay and North Landing River Watersheds that they will adhere to the best management practices and erosion and sedimentation controls. Developers are required to submit erosion and sedimentation control plans with site plans and post a performance bond.

- Develop public education programs in proper operation of septic tanks, fertilizer application and toxic home chemical disposal. Action is needed to instruct the Department of Health to implement the program and to request that a program be developed by the Southeastern Virginia Planning District Commission.

- Create a Back Bay Management District to protect all Back Bay Watershed and a

Pendleton Child Center

Special children helped at 'A different kind of place'

By Cathy LeCompte
Editor

On his last day at Pendleton Child Service Center, Danny a bright 12-year-old with red hair, had mixed emotions. He said he would miss the friends he had made and some of the instructors.

Cheryl Foster Johnson, executive director of the center, assured him that other kids have felt that way, too.

It's kind of a glad/sad feeling, isn't it?" she said.

Pendleton Child Service Center, on South Birdneck Road, opened its doors 12 years ago for children under 13 who have "serious antisocial and maladaptive behaviors." Johnson said "maladaptive" can be widely defined.

"We have very aggressive kids, kids who like to fight," Johnson said. "There are kids who defy any kind of authority. But whatever the behavior, it is something that has reached an extreme."

Pendleton owes its existence to several people, but mostly to Otis Brown who was serving as Director of the Virginia Department of Welfare and Institutions 12 years ago. The state had gotten a federal grant and was considering building another juvenile correction facility. But Brown had a better idea.

"Kids respond rapidly to consistency," Cheryl Johnson said.

"He didn't think we needed another correctional facility," said Johnson. "We had been sending kids to these places and their behavior changed, but when they came back to their families, the old behaviors came back."

"So Brown pushed for a different kind of place, where the kids could stay in their own community and maybe prevent some delinquency."

Many local agencies got together under the direction of Brown and Doug Clark from Chesapeake Social Services and Frances Elrod of Virginia Beach Social Services to create Pendleton which serves Virginia Beach and Chesapeake today.

"The basic idea was that most of the juveniles who ended up in correction facilities were identified when they were young kids as behavior problems," Johnson said. "If we could reach them as soon as they were identified as behavior problems, maybe we could help them avoid problems later on."

Pendleton offers four basic options to children and parents.

The first and least restrictive alternative is a new program called "school based intervention." During the school year, highly trained staff members will

Tourism on the upswing

By Cathy LeCompte

This is the first of a two-part series on tourism in Virginia Beach.

If you look around you while you're basking in the sun at Virginia Beach, and it looks like there are more people on the beach this summer, your perceptions are very good.

According to James Ricketts of the Virginia Beach Tourist Division, more people are flocking to Virginia Beach than ever before.

"Putting all the statistics together, we're having an excellent season so far," Ricketts said.

The statistics he refers to are eye-lifting. Hotel room sales are up 22.5 percent over the January to June period last year. That comes to $31.8 million.

For the month of June 1985, hotel room sales totaled over $13 million.

"The feedback from the businessmen has been good," said Ricketts. "There were some slack days, probably due more to the weather than anything else."

The Tourist Division only has statistics up through June of this year, because they run about a month behind in receiving receipts from the businesses to determine what kind of month they had. But Ricketts can make an educated guess on the July receipts.

"We know we're going into July very strong," he said.

One July statistic that they do have is from the Visitor Center on 19th Street and Pacific Avenue. Over 30,000 people stopped in with inquiries about Virginia Beach during the month. That's up about 10 percent over last July.

Ricketts also said that the two holiday weekends so far have been better than last year's holidays. The Fourth of July is normally the strongest.

"The Fourth was an exceptional weekend for the beach," Ricketts said. "It really turned into a four-day weekend with the holiday coming on a Thursday."

Ricketts said that one of the reasons for the increase in tourism might be the considerable national publicity the city was given. The Tourism Division stepped up publicity this year, sending out press releases

New marine museum will offer much to see

By D. J. Donaldson

Special to the Sun

When you visit the Virginia Museum of Marine Sciences, you can expect a tour that will take you from a small mountain stream to a river, then on the vital salt marshlands, to the Chesapeake Bay and finally to the Atlantic Ocean.

The $7.5 million museum will open its doors to the public late this year, according to C. Mac Rawls, Director. The museum is located at Owl's Creek on eight acres of land on the shores of Rudee Inlet at 717 General Boode Boulevard in Virginia Beach.

Visitors will view the Plains River Room, which has a 10,000 gallon aquarium designed to give the appearance of a river. Designers have gone to great detail to "naturalize" the river. For example, the cross section of the river's muddy bottom displays real tree roots implanted into painted brown concrete.

After leaving the river habitat, visitors will take a stroll on a one-fifth mile walkway overlooking Owl's Creek. The walkway will include views of marsh vegetation, bird observation, and an outdoor fresh visit classrooms one day a week to teach the whole class social skills training. Most of this training involves teaching the children how to get along better with each other, and to learn more about themselves. Johnson thinks it's beneficial to the classroom teacher as well, so he/she can incorporate this social skills work into the curriculum.

"We're not singling any one kid out as a behavior problem," she said. "We're instructing a whole class."

After a child has been referred to them, however, their next option is "out-client services." This program is designed for the particular child's needs and involves a staff member visiting the child and parents at home on a regular basis.

They also have children who participate in the "program" by coming to the facility from 8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m., five days a week. The parents are responsible for transporting the child there and back.

And their other option is to have the child live at Pendleton five days a week and go home on weekends. They have a 16 bed capacity in that program.

Johnson says that no matter which option is chosen, there is always participation from parents.

"We are stringent on a high level of participation from the family," she said. "Parents attend parenting skill training."

"The child is always in the parents' control. If they (parents) don't want to do anything to work with us, we can't help them."

Outside one of the classrooms, each child has posted a piece of paper with his/her name on it. At the bottom of the sheets they have listed, in order of importance, the privileges they enjoy. Some of the kids like to stay up late. Some like to go swimming or play baseball. Others enjoy extra dessert.

They have a point system at Pendleton for being "good" and if a kid doesn't make the grade, the most important of privileges gets axed. The staff encourages the parents to set up the same system so that the training they get at home will be consistent with what they learn at Pendleton.

"Kids respond rapidly to consistency," Johnson said. "We think kids should have to earn their privileges and if they realize they'll lose what they like most by being bad, they'll be good."

The services at Pendleton are free to the participants and allows for a good mix of students, Johnson said. Some are wealthy, some aren't. Johnson said she believes it's important for the services at Pendleton to remain free.

"If we had to charge, we'd eventually be eliminating or alienating some kids who really need our help," Johnson said. "Also, we don't have the negative community connotations that other places do. It's no big deal that your kid's been to Pendleton."

When a parent brings a child to Pendleton, there are no contracts signed or limit put on the stay. The counselors discuss with the parents and child the probable length of time to stay, but nothing is binding.

"The parent always has the option of removing the child from the program. And it's happened a few times, where we and the parents disagree on how much we're helping."

They have no security to keep the children there and a few have run away, but they usually come back. The average stay is about three months, and most of the kids end up feeling like Danny—they don't want to leave when it comes time to "phase out."

"I think we give very positive attention here," Johnson said. "Most of the time their bad behavior is just done to try and get attention. We don't give them attention for that. We comment on what they're doing right."

Used car rule aids consumers

Consumers shopping for used cars, trucks or other motor vehicles now can obtain more buying information.

Under a new federal regulation, which went into effect in May 1985, anyone or any organization that offers six or more used vehicles for sale in a 12 month period must present in writing some very specific consumer information on a sticker, prominently displayed on one of the vehicle's side windows.

This sticker, entitled the "buyers guide," provides information such as:

- Vehicle make, model, model year and identification number;
- Warranty information, such as whether the car is being sold "as is," or with a warranty that is full or limited, implied or express, etc.;
- Whether a service contract is available;
- The name and address of the dealer and the name of a contact person in case of complaints;

- A listing of 14 major motor vehicle systems and accompanying potential defects that may occur in each system.

The Buyers Guide urges consumers "not to rely on spoken promises" and insist that "all verbal agreements be put in writing." The sticker also encourages consumers to ask the seller whether they may have the vehicle inspected by their own mechanic on or off the premises.

The BBB reminds consumers that a copy of this Buyers Guide must be given to them at the time of sale.

The information on the final version of the Buyers Guide must also be incorporated into the contract of sale and will override any contrary provisions that may be in that contract.

For further information about this new regulation contact the regional office of the Federal Trade Commission as listed in the telephone directory, or contact the FTC national headquarters at 6th & Pennsylvania Ave., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20580.

portion of North Landing River Watershed on Pungo Peninsula and Atlantic Ocean Shore. City strategies give special consideration to the protection of watersheds but additional strategies are needed by the Department of Planning for an amendment to the comprehensive Plan. Provide no new public rights-of-way of road improvements for the watershed in five-year capital improvements program geared to increase development potential. The administrative recommendation is to direct the staff to study a rural roads policy and to incorporate it into the Capital Improvement Program process this year.

• Adopt land and soil conservation measures and other "best management practices" that minimize cropland erosion and loss of fertilizers and pesticides to surface waters. The administrative recommendation is to direct the Department of Agriculture to proceed with a program development and cost analysis.

• Site animal waste holding lagoons sufficiently distant from creeks, main ditches, wetlands and periodically flooded lands to prevent inadvertent lagoon dike or dike seal failure. Administration recommendation—adopt as local policy and transmit to the State Water Control Board.

• Dispose of waste on cropland or pastures at regular intervals with spray irrigation equipment, if possible. Exercise care in spraying to avoid overspraying into field ditches. An analysis of the issue is needed by the Department of Agriculture and coordination is needed between the Department and Soil Conservation Service.

• Extend the pump line at Little Island Beach 6,000 feet to a point northerly of Great Narrows to enhance dispersion of the salt water output to the southerly sub-bay areas. Install three outfalls at Great Narrows and two intermediate points to promote dispersion. The Virginia Commission of Game and Inland Fisheries will have a meeting Aug. 23 to discuss possible funding assistance.

• Adjust pumping operations to match salinity conditions in the Bay, increasing pumping rates following months of high precipitation and low salinity and decreasing pumping rates following months of low precipitation and high salinity.

Assistance project offers business tax credits

Community Alternatives, Inc., located in Suite 218, Pembroke IV, has been approved by the Virginia Department of Social Services as part of the state's Neighborhood Assistance project.

Businesses that invest in approved Neighborhood Assistance projects can take state income tax credit for 50 percent of their total contribution.

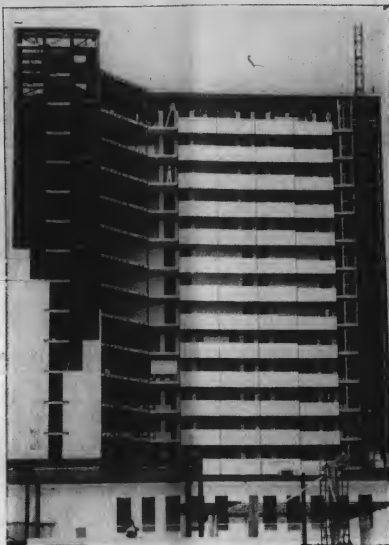

Community Alternatives programs, under the direction of Dennis L. Wool, make available employment and training opportunities to a population which is primarily mentally retarded.

Under this plan, Community Alternatives, Inc. will offer tax credits to the businesses who donate equipment and production/warehouse space.

These donations are expected to increase wages for some clients, to increase the numbers of people who can be employed, and generally, to improve the employment and training opportunities available.

Interested non-profit organizations, with projects that improve the quality of life for Virginia's impoverished citizens, have until October 1 to complete their applications for Neighborhood Assistance Tax Credit approval.

Application forms and further information may be obtained from the Neighborhood Assistance staff, Virginia Department of Social Services, 8007 Discovery Drive, Richmond, Virginia, 23229, 804-281-9204.

Ramada Inn Oceanside Tower

Ramada plans Sept. opening

The Ramada Oceanside Tower will open its new facility to guests in September.

Upon completion the inn at 57th St. and Oceanfront will provide the most oceanfront rooms, 216 and become the tallest hotel at Virginia Beach.

The hotel is also expanding its conference facilities with 8,234 square feet of meeting space, sufficient to accommodate a convention of 400 people. With renovation comes increased parking to 256 on-site spaces.

"We are pleased with the progress we have made to date," says general manager David Pender, III, "and we look forward to showing off the many new amenities to our old friends and new customers as well."

The hotel will also introduce The Tower Club, a new concierge (butler) service to be quartered on the 16th and 17th floors. Special services afforded Tower Club guests will include a private lounge, complimentary continental breakfast, an open bar and express check-out.

Rezoning turned down

City Council Monday afternoon unanimously turned down an application for rezoning which would have permitted the construction of a twin-tower hotel on Newtown Road opposite the Koger Executive Center.

The planned access for the hotel was the principle factor leading to defeat of the proposal by Koger Properties, Inc. to build a hotel with 250 lodging units. The hotel would be part of the Radisson Hotel chain.

The existing zoning on the 4.55 acre parcel on the North side of the Virginia Beach Toll Road and east of Newtown Road permits a variety of office and institutional uses while the proposed H-1 zoning would allow up to 364 lodging units.

Approximately 20 residents from the adjacent residential neighborhood of Fair Meadows showed up to oppose the application. Their attorney, Grover Wright, who is usually an advocate for applicants for rezoning, pointed out that Larry Avenue is an 18-foot road with no curbs, gutters or sidewalks with ditches on both sides. He said that with approval of the application the Council would be giving someone a private driveway which the city would have to maintain to serve the 18 acres, including the 4.55 acres in the application, owned by Koger. He said that the hotel would generate the same traffic as 240 houses. The Fair Meadows Subdivision contains 120 homes.

Safety first in homebuilding

Every component of a building, from the largest girder to the smallest fastener, contributes to structural integrity, according to Michael Goldmeier of C. L. Pincus, Jr. & Company, Inc., in Virginia Beach.

Awareness of the critical importance of building integrity has grown over the past decade, he said, in proportion to the publicity generated by disasters, such as the Hyatt skywalk collapse in Kansas City.

Goldmeier believes the structural integrity issue has been effectively addressed by the pre-engineered building systems industry and, in particular, by Butler Manufacturing Company, which produces the systems his own construction company sells and builds.

Pre-engineered buildings, Goldmeier explains, are factory-bridged structures most often used in construction of manufacturing, commercial and institutional facilities. They currently account for over 50 percent of low-rise, non-residential construction because they can often be built in one-third less time and for a lower cost than conventionally constructed buildings.

"Because of the research that goes into them," Goldmeier said, "these buildings go up quickly without compromising integrity and efficiency. Every part is designed to fit into the systems precisely and to work together with every other part to produce a structure that is energy-efficient, stands up to wind and snow loads, resists water and air infiltration and requires minimal maintenance."

Building components are put through mechanical tests involving bend, compression, flexure, hardness, impact, shear, tension and torsion, Goldmeier said. Researchers also test for the effects of air pollution, heat, cold, moisture, humidity, salt and ultraviolet light on various materials.

"The bottom line is a safe, reliable, long-lasting building for our customer," Goldmeier said.

all over the country.

"We got really good press this year," he said. "We got national coverage on many of the changes we had."

One of those changes is the courtesy patrol, those distinctively clad high school students who are available along the oceanfront to answer tourists' questions and make them feel more comfortable in Virginia Beach.

"We've gotten very positive feedback on the courtesy patrol," Ricketts said.

This year, Atlantic Avenue began to take on a new look. The idea was to make it more accessible to pedestrians and less accessible to vehicles. The police presence at the oceanfront was also beefed up. Ricketts said these extra efforts didn't go unnoticed by the tourists.

"They've noticed that a better attempt is being made to keep Atlantic Avenue clean and uncluttered," Ricketts said.

Police seek information in July murder case

Virginia Beach Crime Solvers is offering a cash reward of $1000 for information concerning the July 16 murder of a twenty year old Virginia Beach woman.

water pond. Although many people refer to a salt marsh as a swamp, the word causes Rawls to flinch. The term swamp connotes "wasteland," he says. The director explains that here, guests will learn about the vital importance of salt marsh life to all other marine life.

Next, participants can expect an introduction to the Chesapeake Bay which first includes a hands-on exhibit of harmless creatures, such as horseshoe crabs, starfish and fiddler crabs.

Sharks, flounder, stingrays and other fish indigenous to Virginia's bay will be viewed in the fascinating journey down Chesapeake Bay Hall. The hall displays the sea creatures in a 55,000 gallon aquarium which is designed to simulate a walk along the bay's floor.

Finally the exposition takes museum visitors on a deep sea diving exhibit through poroliths which display marine life as seen in the Atlantic Ocean off Virginia's coast.

In addition to the theme of the museum, - the trip from the river to the ocean, six 3,000 gallon aquariums will house a variety of sea creatures highlighting common traits such as color, symbiotic relationships, locomotion, and schooling. One of the tanks will show colorful coral reefs.

Another one of the tanks will be the new home for Harold, the famous rescued lobster. The legend concerning Harold centers around whether the 19-pound creature was to be eaten or returned to sea. Unofficially, Harold is estimated to be 93 years old. Hagan's Seafood owns Harold, but an employee got a petition started to save Harold's life. The matter was settled when representatives of Hagan's Seafood asked if the lobster could have a home at the museum. The refuge is temporarily staying at Virginia Marine Resource Center in Manett, North Carolina.

All of this plus more can be seen without leaving the 41,500 square feet of the museum. Still, another major portion of the museum waits to be explored.

Another portion of the 41,500-square-foot museum lets visitors partake in experiments in the water laboratory. The Virginia Council for Environmental Education has allocated $75,000 for the Chesapeake Bay pollution exhibit which is designed to inform people about pollution prevention and control.

Another room, the Sand Room will display different types of sand and teach about its abrasive quality.

A Giant Wave Tank display will show how waves are formed and teach people about wave energy.

Culture and history are depicted in other rooms which include a Chesapeake Wigwam portraying Indian arts, crafts and tools. A display will show the site of an archaeological dig, another will house skilled craftsmen in a decoy carving shop.

According to Julia Fletcher, an administrative assistant and tour guide there, an active participant should plan to spend about three hours touring the museum. The proposed cost of attending will be $3 for adults, $1.75 for children. The museum will be completely accessible to handicapped people.

Rawls gives credit for the "spawning of the museum" to Don Ives.

"In 1973 Ives was an Earth Science teacher at Cox High School," Rawls said. He suggested to Ed Brickell, Superintendent of Schools, to form a science resource room where teachers could put displays, collections and science projects out for exhibit. Brickell was responsive to a good idea and initially appointed the first committee," he says.

Funds for the museum's exhibits came from $2 million of private donations through the Virginia Marine Science Museum Foundation. The cost of the land and building came from $2 million from the Virginia General Assembly and $3.3 million from the City of Virginia Beach.

Citizens group calls for smart action to fight crime

By Cathy LeCompte
Editor

The latest U.S. crime statistics estimate that a violent crime occurs every 24 seconds. A rape occurs every nine minutes.

A national, non-profit organization called Citizens Against Crime, with a regional office in Virginia Beach, offers free seminars to make the public more aware of its susceptibility to crime.

Charles A. Wooten, a senior certified consultant with CAC, said the group originated six years ago in Texas and now has 32 offices throughout the nation.

"The group started out of a man named Jerry Aris' personal experiences with crime," said Wooten. "His house was robbed and he finally said enough is enough."

The trained consultants for CAC give their seminars to businesses, church groups, civic groups, service clubs--any organization of eight people or more that is interested in learning what can be done to protect themselves from crime.

Wooten said he has spoken to about 1,055 people since April. The public is eager to learn what it can do for protection.

"We want to make people more aware of their surroundings," said Wooten.

Wooten said that FBI and police statistics show certain elements are present when a crime occurs. The three elements are criminal intent, vulnerability and opportunity. The elements of opportunity and vulnerability are in the hands of the would-be crime victim to control.

"We can't do anything about that person's criminal intent," Wooten said. "But we can control our vulnerability and the opportunity for a crime to occur."

In the seminars, CAC consultants cite many "common sense" techniques that can be used to cut down the chances of a crime happening. A heightened awareness of what's going on around you will help. Some examples:

- Have your car keys in hand when walking to your car.
- Park in well lit areas.
- Check the back seat of your car when you enter your vehicle.
- Always lock the doors to your house and your car.

Wooten says that although these techniques seem so logical that everyone would use them, most people don't. They continue to remain vulnerable to crime.

"We want to show people that crime prevention is really inexpensive," Wooten said.

The Citizens Against Crime lectures dabble very little in what a person can do after a crime is already being committed. Their main emphasis is on the preventive side. But they do offer suggestions of actions when you're already involved in a situation.

"The most important thing is to try and be calm," Wooten said. "I know sometimes it's easier said than done, but it's very important."

Wooten says one way to better prepare yourself for an attack is to actually rehearse in your mind how you would handle the situation.

"Practice how you would react in many different situations," he said. "Then you can keep your wits about you."

Unlike many -- other organizations, CAC does not recommend fighting with the attacker as a means of getting out of the situation. Wooten says that statistics show that more people are injured or killed by trying to overpower the attacker rather than cooperating with him. CAC advocates cooperation with the assailant until the situation becomes life-threatening. Then, the person should do what is necessary to save his/her life.

"First, you quantify the criminal," said Wooten, "by asking 'what do you want?' If they just want the money, give it to them. Then ask, 'Is that all you want?'"

Statistics show that 7 out of 10 criminals had no intention of harming the victim when they perpetrated the crime.

In recent years, a rash of lawsuits have been filed by victims of assaults against the owners of the premises where they were assaulted. In a fairly well publicized case, singer Connie Francis sued the hotel chain where she was staying when she was raped, and she won the case.

Wooten says that because of these lawsuits, it should be important to businesses to make their employees more aware of crime prevention methods.

"It is becoming the employer's responsibility to keep his employees safe," he said. "People are suing because of the premises for negligence and they're winning the cases."

City Council to consider General Booth strategy

City Council has scheduled consideration for an ordinance regarding the commercial strategy in the General Booth Boulevard area for Aug. 26, a night meeting.

The ordinance has been deferred several times. When the comprehensive Plan was approved earlier in the year, a decision on commercial development was left out for want of a clear-cut strategy. The proposed ordinance, if approved, will be included in the comprehensive Plan for the Courthouse Sandbridge Study Area. The ordinance now requires:

Commercial development be limited to major intersections, considered to be the four-way crossing of highways four lanes or more wide.

Commercial development be limited to the major intersections at Dam Neck Road and at Ferrell Parkway-London Bridge Road but not in between.

Developments should have a minimum of ten acres and coordinated with adjacent properties to the maximum extent practical with an internal vehicular circulation pattern for access to individual establishments with a minimum number of curbs cuts and disruption of traffic flow on General Booth Boulevard.

Sky Watch

A Monthly Feature Prepared By The Science Museum of Virginia

AUGUST SKY CHARTS: To use these sky charts face either north or south and hold the charts directly in front of you with the horizon on the bottom. The charts show the brightest stars and planets between the horizon and the part of the sky directly overhead during the early evening hours this month.

CONSTELLATIONS: The most noticeable star pattern to brighten the southern sky this month is the Summer Triangle, visible in the east and formed by three stars in different constellations. Vega, the brightest star in the triangle, is part of the constellation Lyra. Altair, found in Aquila, and Deneb, which marks the head of the Northern Cross, complete the pattern. In the north, look for the Big Dipper standing on the edge of its bowl. Follow the arc of the Big Dipper's handle away from the bowl to find Arcturus and Spica, visible in the southern. Low in the northeast, four bright stars form the Great Square of Pegasus, the flying horse.

PLANETS: Look for the two planets, Jupiter and Saturn, in the southern evening sky this month.

Jupiter, the brighter of the two, can be found in the constellation Capricornus. The planet will reach its greatest brilliance on Aug. 4, and on that date will be at its closest to Earth.

The ringed planet Saturn can be seen low in the south in Libra. The planet will set about 3 1/2 hours after the sun.

CELESTIAL EVENTS: The Perseid meteor shower, considered the most spectacular meteor show of the year, is expected on the nights of Aug. 11, 12 and 13. The best time to look for these meteors, which average 50 per hour, is after 10 p.m. on the 11th and the shower reaches its peak at 3 a.m. on the 12th. The moon also provides some interesting observing opportunities as it passes each of the two visible planets. In the late evening sky on Wednesday, July 31, look for a full moon to pass within 4° of Jupiter. On Aug. 22, a waxing crescent moon will appear within 3° of Saturn. At month's end, on Aug. 28, look for a waxing gibbous moon to again pass within 4° of Jupiter.

MOON PHASES:

- Last Quarter: Thursday, Aug. 8.
- New Moon: Friday, Aug. 16.
- First Quarter: Friday, Aug. 23.
- Full Moon: Friday, Aug. 20.

Schools announce free meal plan

Virginia Beach Public Schools has announced its policy for free and reduced price meals for children unable to pay the full price for meals served under the National School Lunch Program during the 1985-86 school year. Each Virginia Beach public school and the School Administration Office has a copy of the policy, which may be reviewed by any interested party.

The following household size and income criteria will be used for determining eligibility:

Household Size	Maximum Household Income for Free Meals	Household Income For Reduced Price Meals
1	$ 6,825	$ 6,826-9,713
2	9,165	9,166-13,043
3	11,505	11,506-16,373
4	13,845	13,846-19,703
5	16,185	16,186-23,033
6	18,525	18,526-26,363
7	20,865	20,866-29,693
8	23,205	23,206-33,023
For each additional household member, add	2,340	3,330

Application forms will be sent to all homes with a letter to parents or guardians during the first few days of the new school year. To apply for free or reduced price meals, households should fill out the application and return it to the school. Additional copies are available in the principal's office of each school. The information provided on the application will be used for the purpose of determining eligibility and may be verified at any time during the school year by school or other program officials.

For school officials to determine eligibility, the household must provide the following information listed on the application: names of all household members; social security numbers of all adult household members or a statement that the household member does not possess one; total household income or the household's food stamp case number if they currently receive food stamps; and the signature of an adult household member certifying that the information provided is correct. Households are required to report increases in household income of over $50 per month or $600 per year and decreases in household size.

Applications may be submitted at any time during the year. Under the provisions of the free and reduced price policy, the principal of each school will review applications and determine eligibility. If a parent or guardian is dissatisfied with the ruling, he may wish to discuss the decision with the determining official on an informal basis. If the parent wishes to make a formal appeal, he should make a request orally or in writing to Mr. James G. Ratliff, Jr., Supervisor, Food Services, Virginia Beach Public Schools, P. O. Box 6038, Virginia Beach, VA 23462 or by phoning 427-4744, for a hearing to appeal the decision. The policy contains an outline of the hearing procedures.

If a household member becomes unemployed or if the household size changes, the family should contact the school. Such changes may make the child of the household eligible for reduced price meals, or for additional benefits such as free meals if the family income falls at or below the levels shown above.

In certain cases foster children are also eligible for these benefits. If a household has foster care children living with them and wishes to apply for such meals for them, the household must complete an application.

The information provided by the household is confidential and will be used only for purposes of determining eligibility and verifying data.

In the operation of child feeding programs administered by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, no child will be discriminated against because of race, color, sex, national origin, age, or handicap.

If any member of a household believes they have been discriminated against, they should write immediately to the Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D.C. 20250.

Council approves revenue bonds

A total of $60,465 million in Industrial Revenue Bonds, including a $20 million housing bond, have been approved by City Council.

However, only two entities seeking to borrow $1.9 million in no-interest money have any assurances that they will be covered by allocations. The $1.9 million is included in the local allocation, which is now exhausted. The remaining bonds would have to come out of the State surplus allocation.

The two entities which have been included in the local allocation are Electronic Systems, Inc., for $9 million and RMB Associates for $1 million.

An application by Northall Hotel Associates for $10 million was deferred because the applicable use permit for the hotel has not yet been granted.

Also deferred was the application of Reader Farm Associates for $25 million in Housing bonds.

Councilman H. Jack Jennings Jr., who is generally critical of the bonds, said he supported the issuance of bonds to eight applicants because he considered them legitimate uses. They include Maximus Associates, for a $6.1 million housing bond; Barnett-Range Corp., housing bond; for $20 million; Interstube Marketing Ltd. for $3 million; Gordon Paper Company, $1.5 million; Images International, Inc. for $3 million; Gul USA for $1.5 million; L. M. Sandler and Sons, Inc. for $1.025 million, and BMRI Harbor Court Associates, housing bond for $3.85 million.

Approved by the nine other Council members present and opposed by Jennings were:

Electronic Systems, Inc., $9 million; Pembroke Plaza Associates, for $22.50 million; Aragona Village Shopping Center, $1.540 million; RBM Associates, $1 million; Lighthouse Hotel Associates $10 million; Edward Fischer & Frank Guthrie, $1,280 million; Basler Properties, $6 million, and Dr. Robert W. Waddell, a reissue of $2 million.

Councilman Louis R. Jones also asked that the principals of all the firms applying for the bonds be listed. He noted that the applications lacked this information.

SPENDING YOUR GOLDEN YEARS IN HAMPTON ROADS

Published as a Supplement to
The Chesapeake Post, Portsmouth Times, Virginia Beach Sun

Began during Depression

Social Security generation celebrates 50th anniversary

By Harvey J. Ridinger,

Field Representative,

Social Security Administration

During this golden anniversary of Social Security, Phil belongs to a rather unique "club" of sorts. He was born in August, 1935, the month the Social Security Act became law. You might say he's among the first of the "Social Security Generation."

When Phil entered the world 50 years ago, America was in the midst of the Great Depression. A fourth of the labor force was unemployed (including his dad). Banks, factories, and businesses closed; poverty was prevalent.

The Depression dramatized the fact that the average worker, in an increasingly urbanized society, was dependent on factors beyond his control for economic security. State and local governments were unable to cope with widespread disaster of national proportions.

Pressure for change led to enactment of the Social Security Act on August 14, 1935. The Act established programs to prevent future dependency. One was Old-age Insurance which evolved into what we now call "Social Security".

Phil got his Social Security card in 1951 when he got his first job at 16 but never gave it much thought. At that time, Social Security was still a young program with small benefits for the elderly and certain dependents and survivors. However, the 1950's saw significant expansion with the coverage of millions of more workers, the addition of disability insurance, the easing of eligibility requirements, and strengthening of benefits payments to make them more adequate.

He remembers when his grandparents signed up for retirement benefits at 65 in 1935 and became the first in the family to get Social Security. Since then, many other older relatives and friends have applied for these benefits, and the payments enable them to live with dignity and independence. Moreover, like all beneficiaries, they can work and still get benefits, but they should remember to get in touch with Social Security to find out how much they can earn and still get full benefits.

Little by little, Phil became more aware of other aspects of Social Security. When a younger sister died recently, her two children began receiving monthly survivors checks. And it really hit home 5 years ago when a son was severely injured at work and got disability payments for 2 years until he was able to return to work.

Now that he's reached the "big 50" milestone, Phil is starting to think of retirement for the first time. After all, it's as little as a dozen years away! He wants to know what to expect from Social Security. And since those benefits provide only a base of protection, what supplemental resources—such as savings, and IRA, a pension, etc.—can he count on to allow for a more comfortable retirement?

Social Security has become more than a vague vision in the far future. It is becoming a here-and-now thing that needs to be focused in on.

If you can relate to Phil, start thinking about Social Security and what it can mean to you and yours. Call any Social Security office for free publications that tell more about the program. To find the number, look in your phone directory under "Social Security Administration" or "U.S. Government."

Changing with the times

By Harvey J. Ridinger,

Field Representative,

Social Security Administration

The Social Security Act of 1935 has been revised many times over the past 50 years to keep Social Security responsive to emerging needs. A prime example is the 1983 amendments that strengthened program financing and assures stability both in the short run and in the long-term future.

For several years prior to the Social Security Amendments of 1983, there was concern about the financial soundness of the cash benefits programs. High inflation and unemployment and other factors were depleting trust fund reserves. In making changes, the Congress made a particular effort to have any burden shared by both current workers and by present and future beneficiaries.

The legislation not only addressed the immediate problem, but also included provisions for coping with future unanticipated downturns in the economy. For example, borrowing among the Social Security and Medicare hospital insurance trust funds is authorized when necessary to assure continuation of benefit payments during periods of adverse economic conditions.

Another provision makes a portion of the Social Security payments to some higher-income beneficiaries subject to Federal income tax. About 10 percent of beneficiaries, those with substantial outside income in addition to benefits, are affected. The revenues resulting from this provision are credited to the Social Security trust funds.

The amendments also extended Social Security coverage to Federal employees hired after December 31, 1983, and to employees of nonprofit organizations not previously covered. Certain Federal employees, including the President, Vice President, and members of Congress, are also covered. And the legislation prohibited termination of coverage by State and local government employees.

To assure the future stability of social security, the age of eligibility for unreduced retirement benefits, now 65, will be very gradually increased to 67 between the years 2000 and 2022. Reduced benefits will continue to be available as early as age 62, but the extent of reduction for early retirement will be increased.

Social Security historic milestones

•President Roosevelt signed Social Security Act into law on August 14, 1935, authorizing old-age insurance benefits financed by a payroll tax on workers and their employers. Coverage limited to workers in commerce and industry.

•Social Security Act amended to provide benefits for dependents of retired workers and survivors of deceased workers. (1939)

•Benefit levels increased substantially, reaffirming basic role of the program following a lengthy hiatus during the World War II years, during which price inflation eroded the purchasing power of benefits by over 75 percent and more and more people were forced to turn to needs-tested assistance. (1950)

•Coverage extended to farm workers, the self-employed, some State and local government employees, members of the armed forces, and other major groups during the 1950's.

•Disability insurance benefits authorized for disabled workers and their dependents, financed by a separate payroll tax. (In incremental steps, 1954-56.)

•Medicare program of hospital and medical insurance approved for the aged (1965) and for the long-term disabled (1972).

•Automatic cost-of-living adjustments in benefits and automatic adjustments in the maximum amount of covered earnings and earnings test exempt amounts provided. (1972)

•Correction of "coupled"

benefit formula that increased benefits faster than the rate of inflation and other improvements in program financing. (1977)

•Restoration of financial soundness of system through enactment of balanced package of tax and benefit changes after years of poor economic performance eroded trust fund reserves. (1983)

12,000 Seniors call Chesapeake home

By Greg Glassner
Chesapeake Post Editor

The City of Chesapeake has some 12,000 residents who call themselves "senior citizens."

It is a far more accurate catch-all label than "old" or "retired", since many of them do not seem old, and although most are no longer punching a time clock, they are very active individuals.

The City's Parks and Recreation Department Senior Citizen's Program helps coordinate or sponsors most of the senior citizen activities, although church and neighborhood groups also involve thousands of participants.

Over 7,000 households receive the "Seniorgram" newsletter, which keeps seniors abreast of the latest developments and recaps the activities of the 18 Senior Citizen's Clubs coordinated by the program.

The bright and airy Senior Citizen's Center, located on the ground floor of the new Human Resources Center at Bainbridge Boulevard and Outlaw Street, is a focal point for many activities, ranging from classes and trips to athletic events, stage shows and dances.

Ann Haddock, who became Senior's Coordinator in 1974, is assisted by Julia Consolvo, Martha Clemmons, Kathy Rowley and a host of able volunteers.

"It is stimulating, challenging and frustrating," Mrs. Haddock said of her work with Chesapeake's seniors. "Frustrating, because sometimes you want to do more but can't, because you are limited by resources."

The new center features a lobby and administrative offices, a large, well-lit craft's room, with adjoining storage and kiln rooms, and a large carpeted lounge, complete with library, TV, and exercise bicycles.

A nearby activities room is also available for seniors overflow and is the scene, at noon, of the SEVAMP hot lunch program for seniors.

Traditional craft's classes such as ceramics, beadwork and painting are now supplemented by aerobex, and porcelain doll, creative writing, drama and clown workshops.

Seniors help other seniors obtain I.D. cards at all the city's recreation centers at a rotating basis, and round and square dancing groups meet regularly. There is a Chesapeake senior's band, chorus and even senior cheerleaders.

Major events include the Mini (local) and Golden (statewide) Olympics for seniors, the Spring Fling, which now runs as part of the Chesapeake Jubilee, and the autumn Jamboree, this year set for October 30 in the South Norfolk Community Center.

Parks and Recreation-sponsored senior's clubs are open to any senior citizen.

Activities include regular meetings with guest speakers and entertainment; covered dish luncheons, a variety of special events and trips to destinations as near as Waterside and Elizabeth City and as far as Niagara Falls and New Orleans.

Anyone who has participated in the city's many senior's events can tell you that younger people have a hard time keeping up with Chesapeake's senior citizens.

Portsmouth seniors focus on Center

By Kate Martin
Times Editor

The Portsmouth Senior Citizens Center, at 305 High Street, is the focal point of senior services in the city.

"We reach out into virtually all the human service agencies, the public sector and the private sector, and take whichever services are applicable to seniors. We also have a very close working relationship with Maryview and Portsmouth General hospitals. They provide hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of free health screenings," Carl Johnson, the center's executive director said.

Any Portsmouth resident who is at least 60 years old, or 50 years old with a handicap according to Social Security regulations, or a spouse of either of the above, is eligible for membership at the center. Once a member, the senior can participate in classes and workshops held at or by the center, go on day trips, and make use of other services offered.

One of those services is transportation.

"Our in-house transportation program is sponsored by SEVAMP, the South Eastern Virginia Area-wide Model Program, Inc. We have an 11-passenger van and a station wagon. First priority for transportation goes to trips to the doctors, followed by trips to other human services agencies. Third on the priority list are trips to the grocery store. When no one is waiting for a ride, the van and wagon are used to bring seniors to the center," Johnson said.

In addition to transportation, the center offers education and

Many Beach seniors live by the bay

By Cathy LeCompte
Staff Editor

Westminster-Canterbury in Virginia Beach is on the cutting edge of retirement living facilities, according to Dr. Roy K. Patteson, vice president of community relations.

"What we're offering here is what the future of retirement living will be," said Patteson.

Some of the residents say they came to Westminster-Canterbury for the beautiful view of the Chesapeake Bay. Still others say the quality of the staff was the deciding factor.

Patteson said that demographic projections show that as the average age of the population increases and people live longer lives, the need for facilities like Westminster-Canterbury, where residents can get total care while still living independently, will grow into the next century.

The retirement residence offers a choice of studio, one or two bedroom apartments, comprehensive medical care in the resident clinic and the Health Care Center, housekeeping services, basic cable TV service, one meal a day in the dining room and much more.

The Founder's Fee prices range from $54,900 for a studio apartment to $138,200 for a two bedroom apartment.

But Westminster-Canterbury doesn't just provide a place for its residents to stay. It's a place to live, for people who don't intend to retire from life.

The 403 residents at Westminster-Canterbury work and recreate together to make a strong community spirit. Each floor has a representative on the council that works with the Board of Directors. The residents have the main voice in how they want things at Westminster-Canterbury.

"They are very active in improving their own lives here," said Eric Marie Latimer, director. See BEACH, page 5 tor of resident services. "We've been taking their suggestions about three years since we opened these areas."

The residents have formed about 21 committees to accommodate all their varied interests. Some of them include arts and crafts, physical fitness and outdoor recreation, religious affairs, gardening, spa and pool and the Woodpeckers. (woodworking shop)

"They brought so many talents here," said Latimer.

"They strive to make it like the lifestyle they were used to before," said Patteson.

The inception of the facility is due to the commitment of the Episcopal and Presbyterian churches. The Board of Trustees at Westminster-Canterbury is appointed by the Episcopal Diocese of Southern Virginia and the Norfolk Presbytery of the Presbyterian Church, U.S.A.

Officials at Westminster-Canterbury are very proud of the health care facilities available there. The resident's fees provide them with lifetime health care, right in the building they live in. Intermediate and skilled nursing care is available, as well as respite care, an option that Patteson and Latimer think is important.

"Many times you'll see a situation with a couple living independently, but one is better able to take care of him/herself," said Patteson. "One spouse starts taking care of the other one."

"But with our nursing facilities being so close," Latimer said, "we can offer them the option of letting the nurses take care of the spouse while the other one gets some rest and relaxation from it."

They also have a clinic with three physicians who can take care of the routine visits for blood pressure checks and administering medicines, for example.

The front desk at Westminster-Canterbury is a hub of activity, much like that of a hotel front desk. Through the phone system and other means, a daily check with each resident can be made. Visitors have to check in, before going past the front desk as an added safety feature.

There is a library with many donated books from residents, an arts and crafts room, a woodworking shop, a dark room for the amateur photographers, a large dining hall, a chapel, a commons, a country store, a beauty shop and a pool that was recently acquired with donations from residents. Everything they need is right there in one building, but there are also daily excursions to various shopping or eating establishments in Virginia Beach.

Patteson says they have plans to add on a new wing called the Assisted Living Center, to the health care facility. The new wing will have 14 private rooms and 36 assisted living quarters. Presently, 57 people are using the health care center, with 12 of those being permanently transferred. While Westminster-Canterbury residents have first priority in admittance to the health care facility, the services are also available to the elderly in the community.

"Once they've come here," Patteson said, "they've solved one of the biggest decisions of their lives; they've made a lifetime health care decision."

Westminster-Canterbury has other similar facilities in Richmond, Lynchburg, Rappahannock, and plans for one in Charlottesville. Each resident is separately incorporated. They are a recognized leader in this field of retirement care.

Only a few apartments are unoccupied now and there is a long waiting list.

Many of the residents donate pieces of furniture or paintings to keep in the halls of the 14-floor facility. This is an important part of their commitment to the community they are forming at Westminster-Canterbury.

One resident, Eleonor Beckham, donated paintings that she had done in the 1920's in Paris. They are her copies of works by great masters and they hang near the library in a ground floor corridor.

"It was a lovely thing to do," said Latimer.

Use medicines carefully!

We are familiar with what medications are "supposed" to do for the body, for example, aspirin is taken to relieve headache or decrease a temperature, antibiotics to help clear infections, tranquilizers to help relieve tension. Consideration can also be given to what the body does to drugs. Drugs are absorbed, distributed, metabolized, and eliminated from the body by various body organs.

At approximately age 30, body functions begin to decline. This decline continues as we grow older with the sharpest decline occurring around age 65. How does this decline in body functions affect drug usage in the elderly? (65 years old and older).

In the elderly absorption of drugs from the stomach and small intestine do not appear to be affected to a great degree. However, one note of caution; it is probably better to take an acid at a different time from other medications to avoid interference with absorption. One author even suggests allowing two hours between taking antacids and other drugs. Avoiding taking medications and antacids together is not true all of the time, for example, your doctor or pharmacist will occasionally stress the importance of taking an antacid with a drug to reduce stomach irritation. In addition to antacids, some drugs may interfere with the absorption of other drugs, for example, some bulk laxatives, anti-diarrhea products, and even food may interfere with the absorption process. Asking your pharmacist's advice is always best when taking more than one medication.

In some cases, distribution of drugs to all parts of the body is altered in the elderly due to the increase in percentage of body fat, the decrease in muscle mass, and the decrease of total body water as we grow older.

Prescribing for the elderly is complicated even more by the multiple disease that often exists in the same person....

The liver is the main site of drug metabolism in the body. As we age, our liver is unable to change drugs into inactive compounds as quickly as when we were younger.

The kidney is responsible for eliminating some wastes from the body. Many drugs in either their active or inactive form are removed from the body by the kidneys. Kidney function may decline by 30 percent or more over a lifetime.

Doctors must keep these considerations in mind, especially metabolism and excretion, when they prescribe drugs for their elderly patients. For example, if a 30 year old needs .25 mg of drug a day, then a 70 year old may need either half this amount (.125 mg a day) or possibly less (.125 mg every other day).

Prescribing for the elderly is complicated even more by the multiple disease states that often exists in the same person because several drugs for each disease may be necessary. (e.g. diabetes, arthritis, high blood pressure, etc.) The more drugs a person takes the greater the chances a drug interaction may occur. A drug interaction is a mixture of drugs resulting in unwanted effects. There is evidence that the elderly may be more sensitive to the effects and side effects of some drugs.

It is also bad to mix alcohol with many drugs. Alcohol should be considered a drug in itself. Many over-the-counter (OTC) drugs, which do not require a prescription, may interfere with actions of prescription drugs. Always consult your pharmacist before mixing alcohol or OTC drugs with any prescribed medications you may be taking.

This article only briefly touches on many points to be considered and is written in hopes that you will identify your pharmacist as a drug expert with a great deal of knowledge to share with you.

Regular walking exercise is good for posture, health

According to exercise analysts, more people are taking advantage of the health benefits of walking in order to stay in shape without the risk of injury.

According to these experts, a walking program helps maintain physical fitness in many ways. First, it improves muscle tone while working the cardiovascular system. Its most obvious benefit, however, is that it promotes good posture and overall form.

Where you walk can help condition different segments of the body in addition to providing total exercise. When walking uphill, for instance, muscles in the calves and hips are strengthened. Hiking over hilly terrain not only works the legs and hips but provides aerobic and cardiovascular exercise as well.

A brisk walk does more than just promote good physical health. Marathon runners, along with casual joggers, have long used walking as a psychological aid. The slower pace forces the walker to take time to relax and unwind from the stress of a busy day.

Nowhere has the walker's movement had more impact than, ironically, on the running shoe industry. Manufacturers have found that while running shoes are made for running, walkers have different needs, and many shoes are being designed with these needs in mind. One such shoe line is Kinney's Stadia.

According to David Scurlock of Kinney Shoe Corporation, "The Stadia line includes durable, reasonably-priced, all-around athletic shoes that provide the comfort, support and casual style desired for everyday walking."

Stadia shoes are made of leather and nylon materials that are ideal for vigorous walking. These materials allow air to circulate and perspiration to evaporate within the shoe which helps prevent blisters and other foot problems that can often develop after a very fast-paced walk.

Industry analysts are not sure if the walking trend will win out over the running enthusiasts, but it is expected to increase in popularity, especially during the warmer months.

Portsmouth senior center

training courses for its members, workshops on the major forms of cancer, health clinics and screenings, counseling, information, federal income tax assistance and housing services such as real estate tax relief.

The center is also a meeting place for seniors to talk, play bridge and bingo or learn new skills.

Johnson said the arts and crafts classes, taught by volunteers, are very popular with members. Three kilns take care of the large room full of ceramic pieces in progress, and a smaller room holds completed pieces. In addition to creating the works, the seniors at the center can also sell them at the in-house gift shop.

All the items in the gift shop are handmade by members, and include doilies, woodwork, stained glass ornaments, dolls and comforters. The seniors set the selling price, Johnson said, and receive 90 percent of the cost. The other 10 percent, he said, goes into a center pool for special events.

Special events, like outings on the New Spirit tour boat, fishing trips, shopping trips, and luncheons are usually announced in the center's monthly newsletter. Although some things do get omitted, impromptu mini-trips are popular in the summer, Johnson said, and are organized too late to appear in the notice. And with other events, the center is not given enough time to advertise.

"We are usually notified about surplus food distribution the day before the food comes. We distribute it, but don't have enough time to advertise about it," Johnson said.

The center also offers a chance to get SEVAMP identification cards, which are good for discounts with local merchants and warm inexpensive lunches through the school system for the more than 100 seniors who go to the center daily. But probably the most important service the center offers is a chance for active seniors to be with others.

With the help of three full-time employees and many more volunteers, the senior center is open Monday through Friday from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m. For more information, call 393-1990.

Validation is the key in helping senior citizens cope with Dementia

By Dianne L. Cataska Administrator

Autism Care of Chesapeake
Confusion and disorientation in the elderly is commonly diagnosed as Dementia.

Dementia is defined as "...an impairment of intellectual function, usually accompanied by memory loss and personality change. It is a broad term used to describe a condition wherein a person exhibits specific disabilities of problem solving, memory, orientation, and appropriateness of behavior in relation to the environment."

Some professionals prefer to refer to confusion and disorientation in the elderly as disengagement - disengagement basically from the present reality.

Naomi Feil, a social worker who literally grew up around the elderly, and founder of the theory of Validation Therapy, in her book "Validation The Feil Method" sees it basically as a survival technique.

She states "Disoriented old-old are not 'demented'". By "old-old" she is referring to individuals aged 80 to 100 plus. "Disoriented old-old people have simply outlived their ability to defend themselves against losses and stay oriented. They have simply lived too long to cope with reality.

The losses incurred by the elderly include more than the death of a spouse and friends, the losses include a deterioration in vision and hearing, loss of self-control (such as bodily function), loss of the flexibility of free body movement, and quite often the loss of health. Mrs. Feil feels the old-old have an intuitive wisdom to survive by restoring the past. They are struggling to justify their existence, therefore they are resolving the reasons for having lived.

The elderly who are confused and disoriented are also attempting to resolve the unfinished conflicts in their life in an effort to prepare themselves for death. How often, being a nursing home administrator, I have seen a family upset and embarrassed by a father or mother who curses, calls people names, or is combative, because "when they were in their right mind they never would have done such a thing".

Brush strokes

Patience, soft touch and a good eye all come into play when Lollie Prince addresses the canvas.

Feeling embarrassed or guilty for a parent's behavior is not uncommon, but the family should not feel they have to take the responsibility for a parent's behavior. Interesting enough, from my experience, it seems that quite often this is the very individual who does present this type of behavior. It is as if they have held a lifetime of hurts, anger, and disappointed dreams inside that must now come out to free them for death.

The elderly try as long as possible to hang onto whatever control they can manage. For families caring for an elderly parent or relative in their home, this can be extremely frustrating. You'll often hear them say "mom is impossible, she constantly tells me what to do and how to do it as if I were still a child," or "dad won't listen to a thing I say, he just wants to argue."

Understanding the reasons behind behavior can sometimes make it easier to cope. The elderly need to feel needed, they are grasping to hold onto self-worth. Loss of self-worth leads to confusion and disorientation.

But understanding confusion and disorientation and dealing with it are two different matters. How do you deal with a confused and disoriented elderly parent or relative? Many professionals believe in Reality Orientation. Reality Orientation is a method of reinforcing reality; remind the individual of who they are, where they are, what day it is, and generally the facts of their present reality. Mrs. Feil believes this is not the most effective means of handling this situation with the old-old confused and disoriented. If this individual has outlived their ability to cope with reality, then forcing reality on them seems cruel and can drive them further away. Mrs. Feil suggests her method of Validation.

When using Validation, you simply acknowledge the feelings of the confused and disoriented old-old. Quite often the individual is in a fantasy. A fantasy is an inner reality. It is based on memory and wishful thinking. The key is to pick up on individual clues as to the feelings they are experiencing, such as happiness, sadness, hurt, anger, fear etc. and with empathy, tune in to them.

Recall a time when you experienced the same feeling, touch them in a reassuring manner, and let them know your thoughts about that particular feeling; for example, "it's frightening to feel lonely, isn't it." Also pick up on the person's rhythm; if they are humming, swaying, singing, or rocking, do the same with them. By validating their feelings you build trust and renew feelings of self-worth; you have put their feelings into words to give dignity.

Some physicians use medications to control confusion and disorientation. Medications prescribed depend upon the individual's behavior and their physical status. Medications, in some cases, can be effective, but the individual should remain under the care of a physician during the course of treatment.

Confusion and disorientation may or may not be a normal process of aging. Medical science has never been able to fully explain why some elderly become confused and others do not.

Alzheimer's Disease, which also causes disorientation, generally develops in an individual prior to age 70. The Alzheimer's individual and the disoriented elderly both have nerve fiber degeneration, permanent brain damage, disorientation, recent memory loss, loss of rational thinking, and loss of controls. But their behaviors are not the same. The primary difference is that the Alzheimer's individual tends not to interact with their surroundings. They are quite often robot-like in appearance and movement, and they do not return to the past.

Confusion and disorientation in the elderly has been studied and will be studied for years to come by the medical community. It is a common situation and sooner or later most of us have to deal with it through an aging parent, relative, or friend.

Consulting a physician should be the first step to handling the situation. The second step is to remember that each individual has worth. Remember their behavior is not directed toward you, it is directed toward the circumstances of life. Handle the individual with sensitivity and understanding. Remember we may someday be in their shoes.

Traveling is good diversion for seniors

By Sandy Hill

Surprising enough, we all wake up one morning, look in the mirror of time and discover we've joined hands with an older group of sun-chasers, from the age 55 and up. "Senior Citizens", that's the name they affectionately tack on this particular age group. Yes, there is a life out there where the sun shines an average of 361 days a year; the average temperature is 74.8 degrees; where entertainment and leisure time activities abound; cultural and educational opportunities are there; and instead of biting winds, gentle breezes stir the graceful palms and white sandy beaches line the shores. Is this not a perfect picture of paradise? Not quite that, but set well on the way. Does this sound too good to be true...?

Well, it's all waiting just beyond the nearest airport....Today's senior population is on the move. They want a home that fits a lifestyle in which they can derive all the comforts and pleasures: A pool, wetbar and all the trimmings, in short, a condo, apartment or retirement development complete with social director and a friendly travel agent that understands the wants and needs of the senior group and most of all realizes the restrictions and limitations of living on a fixed income.

Now I know you are saying this is all too good, to be true...but it is out there and you too can be a part of the seniors on the move enjoying life. All those exotic places you've read about as a child in far away lands are really close at hand with the modern means of transportation at your finger tips. Bargains galore await the senior on even the most restrictive budget if you just take a few minutes to contact a travel agent that specializes in senior citizen's travel. The travel industry has just begun to realize the vast market which has in the past been untouched....programs have been set up with this age group in mind.

Because you no longer have to set your schedule on the "After Work On Friday", air travel is reduced on slow days which are Tuesday, Wednesday travel at the most reduced rate which translates savings to you...also because you can go almost on the spur of the moment, tour operators and cruise lines want to fill up those last minute empty rooms or cabins and are willing to reduce the rates up to 70 percent and more. The travel industry has at last realized that it's better to fill those empty seats and what better market than the senior population. Air travel for seniors has even gone so far as what is called a senior passport, which allows you to fly for one year anywhere on the airlines system as often as you like for one unbelievable price. How can I find out about all these discounts, you say...See your local travel agent.

Come on now and enjoy those Golden Years...see all those places you've only read about as a child...the world is shrinking daily, and I'm sure your Treasure Island is much nearer than you think and better yet, within your pocketbook.

Look in your newspaper for the travel section and find the packages designed with you in mind. Drop by a travel agency and browse through the fascinating brochures and ask to speak to the agent that handles senior citizen's specials.

Social Security marks 50th

By Rose M. Lepore
Regional Commissioner
Philadelphia, PA

In August 1985, this country will mark the 50th anniversary of the Social Security program. President Franklin Delano Roosevelt's message to Congress in support of the proposed legislation stated: "Security for the individual and for the family concerns itself primarily with three factors. People want decent homes to live in; they want to locate them where they can engage in productive work; and they want some safeguards against misfortunes which cannot be wholly eliminated."

The passage of this legislation and the role the government assumed was certainly not unique in world history. In fact, some modern industrial nations of Europe had social insurance systems in place nearly 50 years prior to our system.

But over the years one thing has remained constant—the concept that the Social Security system is an orderly transfer of income from current workers to retirees. It is a system which enables workers to make level and predictable lifelong payments for the support of their older citizenry. In addition, by pooling the cost of this support, it ensures current workers against the risk of the random and often devastating burden of providing financial support for their own older parents and relatives. This aspect of the social insurance program is all too often ignored.

Currently, over 36 million people—about 1 out of every 6 persons in the country—receive monthly Social Security checks. In addition, some 24 million people age 65 and over, nearly all of the nation's older population, have health insurance under Medicare. Another 3 million disabled people under 65 also have Medicare. Nearly every family, then, has a stake in Social Security.

One other positive program aspect must be mentioned. Social Security, the fundamental source of retirement income for older Americans, remains a significant deterrent to widespread poverty among the elderly. As Social Security has grown to provide benefits to a larger proportion of the aged population, public assistance payments to the elderly have come to play a less significant role. Thus our elderly have been provided an income program with dignity, not based on need, a plan to which we all aspire for ourselves and our loved ones.

Today, social insurance benefits are credited with preventing widespread poverty which would exist if Social Security were not available, according to estimates by the Office of Management and Budget. Without these payments, it is estimated that 55 percent of the elderly today would be classified as poor.

Some people, however, may feel that Social Security is no longer a good deal. The truth is that Social Security is, and always will be, a good deal for America. Under Social Security, like any insurance arrangement, some people get back more than they put in, some break even, and a very few get less. On the average, young people entering the workforce today can still expect to get protection and benefits that exceed the value of the taxes they and their employers will pay with respect to their earnings. Workers pay this tax with the expectation that they will receive partial replacement of their income in the event of retirement or disability, as well as benefits for their survivors when death occurs. Part of this tax also provides health insurance under Medicare for people age 65 and over and for certain disabled people under age 65.

It is certainly true that many workers early in the program got a tremendous windfall from the taxes they paid. The return on taxes paid in may not be as great for many workers in the future. But this is simply because the program has matured, and this maturing was always expected by the original planners of the program. Social Security is not a speculative investment scheme for getting rich with a small contribution, anymore than any pension or annuity is. But it remains a sound investment, guaranteed by the government, for all workers, and a sound investment for the Country as a whole.

In the years to come, aspects of the social insurance program will be repeatedly reassessed, and adjustments may be made to payroll tax payments, benefit levels, the income tax treatment of benefits, and even categories of eligibility. Whatever modifications may lie ahead, some form of massive income transfer from workers to retirees will continue to be a major part of the system in the foreseeable future. And if you really think about it, society as a whole has to provide the elderly with the assurance that despite all the economic changes that may take place in a working lifetime, there is a program for a means of income when the working career is over. It is a partnership between generations and as our 50th anniversary theme suggests, "Social Security—Partnership With Tomorrow."

17 no-nonsense questions and answers

By Harvey J. Ridinger,
Field Representative,
Social Security Administration

Q: How can I figure how much my retirement benefit will be?

A: The answer to this one is based on a number of factors...how long you've worked under Social Security and your average lifetime earnings. Let me say that the maximum monthly benefit for a worker retiring this year at age 65 is $717. If you're married and your wife or husband is also over 65, that figure will be more. If you'd like an estimate of your Social Security benefit, you can get one at any Social Security office. We just updated our estimates for 14 million people who are age 60 or over.

Q: If both a husband and wife work under Social Security and both retire, will the woman have to take her own benefit?

A: When she applies for benefits, we'll figure the amount of her monthly check both ways. She'll be entitled to whichever is larger...her own benefit, or the wife's benefit, which is 50 percent of her husband's benefit at age 65. If she's been working all or most of her life, at high wages, it's quite likely that her own benefit will be higher than a wife's benefit.

Q: I'm 62 and my former husband, we're divorced, is now 65. Am I eligible for any retirement benefits from Social Security? He hasn't retired yet.

A: Yes, you can get retirement benefits based on your former husband's record provided you were married for at least 10 years and you've been divorced for at least 2 years. This is the first year that it's been possible to get benefits even though he has not yet retired. Of course, if your own earnings record gives you a larger monthly benefit, that is the one you will get.

Q: Can I have my Social Security check sent to my bank? How do I sign up for direct deposit?

A: Almost any financial organization will accept direct deposit of your Social Security check. It can be a savings bank, a commercial bank, a savings and loan association or similar institution. If you already have a saving or checking account, you'll probably want to continue dealing with the same bank and have your check sent there. If not, you may want to consider the location of the prospective organization and what services they offer...free checking for example. To sign up for direct deposit, all you have to do is complete a direct deposit form, SF-1199. They are available at your financial institution and the people there will be glad to help you complete the form. Your present monthly benefit check contains all the information you'll need when you sign up for direct deposit. And, by the way, it usually takes about 90 days for direct deposit to begin. You might want to ask your bank to make sure you're notified when it does. Of course, in the meantime, you'll continue to receive your Social Security check at your home address.

Q: If I will withdraw money from my IRA have I withdrawn from my Social Security checks?

A: Your IRA withdrawal may affect your taxes, but won't affect the amount of your Social Security checks at all. Social Security is a retirement system and the only income that affects benefit checks is income from wages or self-employment. In fact, we encourage people to supplement their Social Security benefits with income from other sources such as savings, pension, and investments such as IRAs.

Q: I'll be getting married next month and I wonder if I should get a new Social Security number.

A: You never need to get a new Social Security number. Your original number is your's for a lifetime. However, if you'll be using your married name in your job, and when you file your taxes, you'll want to get a new Social Security card showing your married name. All you have to do is call, write, or visit your Social Security office. You will need proof of your identity under both your old and your new names and the reason for the change...Your marriage certificate will do fine. It will take about 2 weeks to get your new Social Security card in the mail. The service is free.

Q: My son tried to get his own Social Security card recently but was told he needed proof of his age, citizenship, and identity. That certainly wasn't the case when I got mine years ago. Why has there been a change?

A: There are new rules that require proof of age, citizenship, and identity. They are intended to help protect an applicant's Social Security record and to prevent the misuse of Social Security numbers.

Q: I've been receiving widow's benefits for several years, and I understand that I can remarry without losing them. Is this true?

A: Yes, you can remarry without losing any of your benefits, provided you are 60 or over. By the way, if you're 62 or over and remarry, you can elect a wife's benefit on your new husband's record if he is entitled to a Social Security benefit, and if it would be larger than your widow's payments.

Q: If I take early retirement, when do I sign up for Medicare?

A: You'll automatically receive information on Medicare enrollment in the mail about 3 months before your 65th birthday, if you're getting Social Security. If not, contact any Social Security office about 3 months before your birthday to sign up. That way you'll be assured of having complete protection when you reach 65.

Q: Is there any way I can have my aunt's benefit check sent to me. She's nearing 90 and she just isn't able to handle her own funds anymore.

A: Yes, you can. You'd become what we call a representative payee. You'd have the responsibility of seeing to it that her benefits are used properly. You'd also have to make a report on your use of the funds when asked to do so, and you'd have to report any changes that might affect your aunt's benefits. For more information about becoming a "rep" payee and the responsibilities involved, call or write to any Social Security office and ask for a copy of the pamphlet, Your Duties as a Representative Payee.

Q: Is there any minimum amount of the time you must work before you qualify for Social Security disability benefits? My neighbor's son recently had a severe car accident which will keep him from working for at least a year, but he hasn't been employed that long.

A: It depends on the age of your neighbor's son, and how long he has worked under Social Security. If he's under 24, he'll need credit for 1½ years of covered employment

Social Security: what the President's said

Franklin D. Roosevelt:

"This law represents a cornerstone in a structure which is being built but is by no means complete—a structure intended to lessen the force of possible future depressions, to act as a protection to future administrations of the Government against the necessity of going deeply into debt to furnish relief to the needy—a law to flatten out the peaks and valleys to deflation and of inflation—in other words, a law that will take care of human needs and the same time provide for the United States an economic structure of vastly greater soundness."

—August 14, 1935

Harry S. Truman:

"It has long been recognized as an inescapable obligation of a democratic society to provide for every individual some measure of basic protection from hardship and want caused by factors beyond his control. In our own country, the obligation of the Federal Government in this respect has been recognized by the establishment of our social security system...The passage of the Social Security Act in 1935 marked a great advance in our concept of the means by which our citizens, through their Government, can provide against common economic risks..."

—May 24, 1948

Dwight D. Eisenhower

"...The system is not intended as a substitute for private savings, pension plans, and insurance protection. It is, rather, intended as the foundation upon which these other forms of protection can be soundly built. Thus, the individual's own work, his planning and his thrift will bring him a higher standard of living upon his retirement, or his family a higher standard of living in the event of his death, than would otherwise be the case. Hence the system both encourages thrift and self-reliance, and helps to prevent destitution in our national life."

—January 14, 1954

John F. Kennedy

"It is with great satisfaction that I have signed into law the Social Security Amendments of 1961. They represent an additional step toward eliminating many of the hardships resulting from old-age, disability, or the death of the family wage earner...A Nation's strength lies in the well being of its people. The Social Security program plays an important part in providing for families, children, and older during the 3-year period ending when his disability started. Military service, if he has any, counts. If he's between 24 and 31, he must have worked in covered employment for at least half of the time between his 21st birthday and the time he became disabled. Q: My new doctor doesn't accept assignment of Medicare medical insurance payments. I know I have to file the claim for payment myself, but I've never done this before. How do I do it?

A: You need to complete a form entitled A Patient's Request for Medicare Payments, also called a form 1490S.

Send form to the Medicare carrier that handles medical insurance claims in your part of the country. You can get a copy of the form at any Social Security office, where you can also get help in filling it out.

Q: Can I have my Medicare medical insurance payments sent directly to my doctor?

A: Payments may be sent either to the patient or directly to the doctor under what is called an assignment. However, not all doctors accept assignments under Medicare and some doctors decide if they will accept assignments on a case by case basis. Assignments of Medicare payments can only be made if both the doctor and the patient agree that his or her charges will be no more than the Medicare-approved charges. Medicare then pays the doctor 80 percent of the approved charges, less any part of the $75 deductible not previously met. However, if payment is made directly to the patient, the doctor can bill the patient for the actual charges, even if they are greater than the approved Medicare charge. It's best to make sure you discuss charges for services with your doctor early so you have a clear understanding of how much you will be paying and how it will be paid.

Q: Can my lawyer file a Social Security claim for me?

A: You have the right to be represented by an attorney in any business you have with Social Security. However, you'll find that in most cases you'll be able to handle your business with Social Security by yourself. If you do need help, the people in our office are always ready to lend assistance. If you still feel you want to be represented, we will be glad to work with your attorney just as we would with you. However, there are special rules about who may represent you, about what your representative may do and may not do and on what your representative may charge. For more information, get in touch with our office.

Q: I plan on working beyond 65. Is there any reason to contact Social Security before I'm actually ready to retire?

A: Yes, there is. Even if you don't retire at 65, you'll still be eligible for Medicare. It's important to contact Social Security 2 to 3 months before you or your husband reach 65 so your health insurance protection can start when you reach 65. If you wait until the month you reach 65 or later, you'll lose one or more months of Medicare protection. Remember, too, that many private health insurance companies adjust their coverage to take account of Medicare when you reach 65.

Q: What is the open enrollment period for Medicare medical insurance? How do I know if it affects me?

A: The open enrollment period is the period between January 1 and April 1 when those people who didn't sign up for Medicare medical insurance...have the opportunity to do so if they desire. When you become eligible for Medicare you're given the option of signing up for the medical insurance part of Medicare. If you don't elect it during your initial enrollment, you can do so during any open enrollment period. Protection will start the following July and the monthly premium will be 10 percent higher than the basic premium for each 12-month period that you could have been enrolled but were not, except for certain employed people 65-69.

Q: How long should I wait to report non-receipt of my Social Security check? And how do I go about it?

A: First, allow 3 days after the expected date of receipt to report a missing check...to make sure it hasn't been delayed in the mail. If you still haven't received your check, there could be several reasons; First, a change of address. If you've changed your mailing address recently, this could be the reason. If not getting check. Make sure you notify both the post office and Social Security of your new address as soon as you can. Another reason for a missing check could be that a check wasn't due. Perhaps you earned too much from a job or failed to meet some requirements for continuing checks. Your missing check also could be due to loss or theft. When you report a missing check, someone at the Social Security office will make sure you had a payment due and that a check was issued. If that's the case, you'll have to sign a notice of missing payment which is then sent to the Treasury Department. If your check was simply sent to the wrong address, it will be sent to the right address and you should have it within several days to a week. If your check is missing and hasn't been cashed, a new one will be issued within a few weeks. However, if your check was stolen and cashed, an investigation will be necessary and it could take several months before you receive a check. To prevent the possibility of theft, you might want to consider direct deposit. Ask your bank or financial institution how you can sign up for this convenient way to make sure you get your check on time.

Social Security facts and figures

Enactment of Social Security Act - August 14, 1935:

•U.S. population in 1935 was about 125 million.

•One-third of Americans were "ill-housed, ill-clad, ill-nourished." (President Franklin Roosevelt)

•Up to one-fourth of the nation's 35 million workers were unemployed.

Original legislation: Social Security Act included three major components:

- Old-age insurance (which evolved into what we now call "Social Security");
- Unemployment insurance; and
- Public Assistance.

Old-age insurance was designed to provide monthly benefits when there was a loss or reduction of income from work in old age.

•Purpose of the program was to help prevent the kind of widespread economic insecurity of the elderly that occurred during the 1930's.

•Benefits were based on cumulative wages under the program.

•Benefits paid without regard to nonwork income, including savings, insurance, investments, pensions, etc.

•Old-age program faced a constitutional challenge. •Legality was upheld by the Supreme Court in Helvering v. Davis in 1937.

Program development and improvement

First major changes were made in 1939.

•Monthly benefits became payable in 1940, instead of 1942 as originally planned.

•Social Security became a family program, rather than one just for the aged, by providing benefits for certain dependents and survivors of insured workers.

•The basis for computing benefits was changed from cumulative lifetime earnings to average monthly earnings, thereby relating benefits more closely to past earnings.

Coverage was extended to more people in 1950's

•When Social Security began, only 27.4 million workers in commerce and industry were covered.

•1950 legislation added coverage for 9 million more people: regularly employed farm and domestic employees; most urban self-employed; employees of State and local governments and nonprofit organizations, on an elective

How much do you know about Social Security?

This year, for example, you may be paying up to $2,800 into social security (if an employee). This is quite an investment of money, specially with after-tax dollars. But how much do you really know about this comprehensive plan which benefit you, your spouse and your children?

•By the end of the 1950's, 9 out of 10 employees and self-employed people were under Social Security.

Disability insurance added:

•Disability "freeze" in 1954 protected future retirement and survivor benefit rights of disabled workers.

•Cash benefits first paid in 1957 to disabled workers 50-64 and to adults disabled since childhood.

•Dependents of disabled workers eligible in 1958 and disabled workers at any age in 1960.

•In 1965, required duration of disability changed from "long-continued and indefinite duration" to 12 months.

•Medicare legislation enacted in 1965

•Most people 65 and over became eligible for hospital and medical insurance in 1966.

•Medicare was extended in 1973 to people getting disability checks at least 2 years and to insured workers and dependents with permanent kidney failure.

Other changes were made

•Over the years, insured status requirements were modified.

•Additional categories of dependents and survivors became eligible for benefits.

•Cost-of-living benefit increases were first provided in 1972.

Social Security financing

Program is basically a pay-as-you-go system:

•Social Security taxes paid by today's working people and employers finance current benefits, with relatively small trust fund reserves maintained for use in temporary shortages where income is less than outgo.

•Revenues to the system not needed immediately for benefits and administrative costs are held in trust funds separate from other U.S. Government funds.

•Trust fund reserves are invested in U.S. Government securities, which may be redeemed at any time if funds are needed for benefits or administrative expenses.

Administrative costs are low:

•Administrative expenses are only 1.3 percent of benefits.

Social Security Amendments of 1983:

•Changes restored financial stability to Social Security both in the short run and in the long-term future.

•Distributed burden among taxpayers and beneficiaries, present and future.

Major changes included:

•Extending coverage to new Federal employees and those working for nonprofit organizations;

•Delaying the 1983 cost-of-living increase for 6 months and providing for moving subsequent automatic adjustments from June to December.

•Moving up a portion of previously scheduled tax-rate increases and reallocation of Social Security tax income between the Old-Age and Survivors Insurance and Disability Insurance trust funds;

•Increasing Social Security tax rates for the self-employed to the combined employee/employer rate (special provisions reduce the impact of this change);

•Taxing part of the benefits of certain upper income beneficiaries; and •Scheduling a gradual increase in the age of eligibility for unreduced retirement benefits from 65 to 67 in the next century.

True or false?

•The Social Security tax is levied on your total earnings, no matter how much you earn.

•Social Security benefits are always income tax-free to the recipient.

•When a worker reaches age 65, Social Security benefits become payable automatically.

•In order to enroll in Medicare at age 65, you must retire and receive income benefits.

•"Fully insured" means that you are entitled to certain benefits.

The Answers:

All of the above answers are false, here is why:

•There is a cap on how much any individual will pay in Social Security taxes in a year. For example, in 1985 the minimum employee earnings taxable are $39,600.

•Not any more! Beginning with 1984, Social Security benefits may be taxable as income to persons with higher incomes ($25,000 for individuals and $32,000 for a married couple).

•Not so, you have to apply and provide specific documentation of age, etc.

•Medicare is available if person is at least age 65, whether or not he has retired.

•"Fully insured" means that you are entitled to certain benefits. The amount of the benefit is based on your average monthly wages under the law (which in turn, governs the "primary insurance amount").

Direct Deposit helps seniors with finances

Following is an important message for Senior Citizens who receive any of these monthly check payments in the mail:

- Social Security
- Retirement or pensions
- Dividends
- Veteran's compensation

Over one million government checks are lost, stolen or delayed in the mail each year, plus a number of corporate retirement and dividend payments also end up missing.

According to the National Automated Clearing House Association, however, the risk of having your check lost or stolen can be eliminated by having payments automatically deposited into your bank account each month.

Increasingly, senior citizens are relying on direct deposit not only for its convenience, but because it makes them less vulnerable when checks such as Social Security are scheduled to arrive.

In fact, over 15 million Americans currently have their Social Security payments directly deposited into their accounts.

If you're interested in the security and convenience of direct deposit for your Social Security or veteran's payments, contact your financial institution.

For information on direct deposit of retirement, pension, or dividend payments, contact the issuing corporation.

Do you know how much money you need?

Do you know how much income you need and for how long you will need it?

The years leading up to retirement include the learning years, yearning years and the golden years. For more than 75% of the American people, the golden years, or retirement, can be a frightening time. It is pictured as a time of comfort and leisure but a number of people, approximately 23%, are forced to continue to work provided they are fortunate enough to have the type of job that will permit them to continue. If retirement was not planned there may not be extra dollars for luxuries and perhaps not even enough for bare necessities.

If you are retired or planning to retire within one to five years, it is too late to worry about planning to accumulate for the golden years. But it is certainly not too early to sit down with a financial planner and discuss your retirement options, which can help you answer these questions:

- How much income do you need or want, and for how long?
- How will this income be treated with regards to your social security benefits?
- Where can you position your accumulated dollars so they will continue to work hard and provide capital appreciation as well as income?

• Should you have tax-favored income?

• Should you take your retirement monies in a lump sum distribution if allowed? How will that effect your taxable income that year?

• How do you protect yourself against inflation and erosion of the purchasing power of your dollar now that you are no longer earning an income and you are dependent on the earning of your assets?

A complete review by a financial planner can help put your mind at ease so that you will know your financial status at retirement, or if retired, not having to worry about outliving your money.

"This Nation must not break faith with those Americans who have a right to expect that Social Security payments will protect them and their families...In the 34 years since the Social Security program was first established, it has become a central part of life for a growing number of Americans...Almost all Americans have a stake in the soundness of the Social Security system."

Don't take chances

When in doubt, turn to your pharmacist

Perhaps the following scenario is a familiar one to you or a member of your family.

Sixty-five-year-old Mrs. Lopez is released from the hospital following a hip replacement surgery. Her stay was much shorter than anticipated by either she or her daughter.

Leaving the hospital in a wheelchair, Mrs. Lopez tells her daughter: "I don't know if I'm ready to leave yet. I still need help getting out of bed."

Being discharged from the hospital sooner than previously considered practical is not uncommon these days. In fact, more and more patients are now recovering from an injury or illness in their own home instead of during an extended hospital stay.

This development can be attributed to the new government regulations on Medicare reimbursement and policies passed in 1982. The plan called for earlier discharges, forcing patients, both private and public, to return to their homes to recuperate. Some medical authorities question this practice, but it is a fact of medical health care today.

Many health care experts blame the government crackdown on inflationary Medicare costs on abuses by hospitals and physicians—since Medicare traditionally reimbursed costs on any order written by a physician.

But Medicare is only the scapegoat for the two real but hidden culprits: malpractice insurance rates and medical technology. The exorbitant premiums paid by doctors and hospitals to protect themselves from lawsuits are reflected in their increased charges. And expensive new technologies enable people to live longer but the investment in equipment has driven medical costs skyward. New medical techniques enable people to live longer, but at a price.

With more rehabilitation and recuperation on an outpatient basis or in the home, consumers now find themselves buying their own medical equipment for home care.

Whom should consumers turn to for guidance and expert advice? According to Michael Molloy of The Futuro Company in Cincinnati, a leader in the field of home care equipment for over 70 years, the neighborhood retail pharmacist is the best community source of this information.

Trained pharmacists have expanded their base of knowledge beyond filling prescriptions. Many have special home care sections complete with an array of patient aids, including walkers, canes, crutches and wheelchairs as well as soft goods. With knowledge of this highly specialized field, they stand ready, as always, to assist customers in obtaining the necessary equipment for their particular home care needs.

Portsmouth General's aware of unique needs

Portsmouth General Hospital recognizes that the needs of the elderly are unique, and has implemented a program which specifically addresses these concerns.

The Senior Life Program was developed in response to the growing proportion of persons in the over-65 age group, and their changing needs. Portsmouth General is reshaping the ways it can serve the elderly community through programs and services which reach beyond inpatient services.

One component of The Senior Life Program is LIFELINE, a personal emergency response system. LIFELINE allows persons who are elderly or handicapped to live at home with a sense of security and safety. In the event of an emergency, the subscriber merely presses a button which transmits a signal to the LIFELINE unit. The unit then contacts the hospital communications center, and a predetermined "responder" is sent to check on the subscriber. Portsmouth General currently operates about 30 LIFELINE units. The cost to the subscriber is only $10 each month, and no deposit is required.

The most recent addition to The Senior Life Program is Portsmouth General's home health agency, HomeLife Health Care. HomeLife Health Care brings skilled nursing into the home. Along with skilled nursing, services offered include physical therapy, speech therapy, occupational therapy, respiratory therapy, nutritional services, and medical social service. Affiliation with the hospital provides skilled personnel with the support of the entire facility, and continuity of care, and convenience for the patient and physician.

The Non-emergency Transfer Service provides wheelchair and stretcher transportation service to and from almost anywhere. It is designed for those people whose medical condition prevents them from riding com-tortably in a car. The Non-emergency Transfer Service is ideal for trips to and from the patient's home and doctor's offices, nursing homes or hospitals.

The Visitor's Escort Service offers wheelchair transportation to the visitors of PGH who would like assistance in going from the lobby to a patient's room and back.

Many other Senior Life services are currently under development. A recently held meeting of the PGH Senior Life Advisory Committee focused on identifying the needs of the elderly and how Portsmouth General can better meet these needs. The committee members include representatives from PGH, as well as prominent community senior life interest groups.

Many home services available at Maryview

Maryview Hospital can assist you with a wide variety of home healthcare needs through our Medicare-certified Wellspring Home Health Agency, Hospice, and Private Care Services.

Wellspring, soon to celebrate its sixth year in community service, is the bridge between hospital and home. In late 1979, Wellspring's only home health nurse made her first home visit in Portsmouth. The staff at that time consisted of a nurse, an aide and a secretary. A single room at the hospital served as the office.

Currently, Wellspring has a staff of 15, which is responsible for a total of 43,054 home visits to date. They can now provide the intermittent services of a registered nurse, physical therapist or speech pathologist for homebound patients with physical and/or emotional illnesses.

Maryview Hospital is committed to providing an alternative approach to the traditional care of the terminally ill patient. Maryview's Hospice program was the first hospital-based program of its kind in Portsmouth, and one of only a few in Tidewater.

The program offers a unique approach to the care of individuals in advanced stages of terminal disease. It is the result of the hospital's effective collaboration with many community agencies and in-hospital departments that help support this long-needed special service. Volunteer Hospice of Portsmouth works closely with Hospice to provide companionship, emotional support and daily non-medical assistance.

Hospice patient care is coordinated by an interdisciplinary team of professionals including the private physician, social worker, nurse, and a representative from the hospital's pastoral care department.

Maryview's Private Care Services are available to fill a variety of needs. All levels of health care personnel from companions to registered nurses can be provided for any member of your family, no matter what the age.

For more information on the variety of home care services available through Maryview Hospital, call Wellspring/Hospice Home Health Care at 398-2576.

Home: a place that promises privacy and safety.

Comfort and caring. Time and space to relax.

Not unlike our own nursing center. Here our objective is to provide our residents with exceptional care in a home atmosphere.

A safe home — always a prime consideration. For the resident, for our staff. Our building design furnishes maximum evacuation accessibility with a state-of-the-art fire alarm system, sprinkler system and smoke detectors. Room call bells, hand-rails throughout our facility, TV monitors and bathroom safety devices add to our patient's protection.

All assure our patients and their families that safety is a prime concern at our center.

Concentrating on the individual's comfort and privacy, we offer large single and double occupancy accommodations, in a bright and spacious atmosphere. Large windows open onto sunny courtyards and well-tended grounds. In-room baths, TV and telephone hook-ups and individual climate control enhance the resident's sense of independence, so important to his or her well-being. In addition, there is much community space . . . with lounges, a large dining room and activities room providing the individual opportunities for both privacy and social belonging.

Still, it is our staff that supplies the most important ingredient of the center: caring.

Remaining at home is many seniors' goal

"My mother is 84 years old. She lives all alone in another state. She does not want to live anywhere else but I know she is sometimes confused and forgetful and I am sick with worry about her. I must find someone to be with her for a few hours each day—someone who will respect and care for her—someone I can trust."

While home care is not just for the sick and not just for the elderly, it is seniors who are most often served by homemaker-home health aides. And for the elderly, being able to remain at home assures a life of dignity and independence. Often, just a few hours a day or even a couple of days a week of personal care, homemaking, shopping and other errands by an aide will enable a frail, elderly person to remain at home rather than having to go to an institution.

How to find that "someone to trust" is best achieved by not looking for a "someone," but by seeking out a responsible agency in the community which screens, selects, trains and supervises a staff of in-home care workers. Such an agency provides the client with a service team. That means that someone with professional qualifications—a nurse or social worker, for example—will find out what the individual's needs are, work out a plan to meet those needs, and supervise the work of the homemaker-home health aide in carrying out that plan.

Home care is not a single service. It is a wide range of services with one common goal: to preserve life in the home and to improve the quality of life by offering such services as medical care, nutrition supervision, skilled nursing, therapy, and personal care—as well as services to keep the home itself in good condition.

The National HomeCaring Council approves and accredits those agencies which meet its high standards of training for aides, supervision of their work by professionals, and maintaining a flexible plan of care. Whenever possible, a person in need of home care should seek out an approved or an accredited agency.

For more information, send for the booklet entitled "All About Home Care: A Consumer's Guide." Send a self-addressed, business-sized envelope and $2, payable to the National HomeCaring Council, to: National HomeCaring Council, 235 Park Avenue South, New York, New York 10003.

The irony of retirement travel

Oh, the irony of retirement travel! Even as your time and your interests have become boundless, your budget and your energy have become more restricted.

Never mind, you can still have it all—if you plan, select and budget carefully. Here are a few tips.

•Although exotic and distant holidays are often the most stimulating, more relaxation can often be found in destinations requiring less travel time and culture adaptation. Some of these North American, Caribbean and Pacific destinations also offer off-season discounts.

•Many tour companies stick to schedules and prices which are unsuitable for the average retired person. Firms specializing in tours for the older traveler include Boston's Saga International Holidays and the Long Beach, California-based American Association of Retired Persons.

•County and small town inns offer a charming and more relaxing alternative to chain hotels and motels. Although the New England inns are particularly well-known, it is worth considering the 11 inns in Virginia's beautiful and historic Shenandoah Valley. Not only are they en route down the major, Canada to Florida Sun-belt route, they are convenient to Washington, D.C. and to the spectacular Blue Ridge Parkway which celebrates its Golden Anniversary this year.

For further information on any of these programs write to Mary Moore Mason, 109 East 38th Street, New York, N.Y., 10016.

CAC wants tougher codes on conflict

By Cathy LeCompte

The Citizen's Action Coalition is seeking support to strengthen Virginia Beach's conflict-of-interest laws, said CAC president Walter Vargo at a press conference in his home Thursday.

In a prepared statement, Vargo said, "We feel that under present laws there is too much latitude, with the opportunity for misinterpretation and/or abuse."

State law requires that public officials refrain from voting on matters when they earn more than $10,000 in annual income from the rezoning applicant.

The Coalition has obtained thousands of signatures over the past several weeks on petitions for this issue and another, allowing citizens to amend, propose and/or repeal existing ordinances and to recall public officials. They need 25 percent of the registered voters as of the last election to sign in order to get the two issues on the ballot for the next elections in November 1985 or May 1986.

The Coalition would change the existing code to put no limit on the amount of money that should be questioned in a conflict-of-interest. Bryan Evans, committee chairman for the petition drives called the $10,000 limit "useless."

The way the law reads now, Evans said, "If a guy makes $9,999, he's O.K., but if he makes $10,001, he's a thief. Any financial transaction at all is suspect."

Mayor Harold Heischob said last week that he will appoint a five-member committee to recommend to council how a local ordinance should be structured. The panel is to include civic league members and members of the business community, as well as at least one retired military representative. Evans and others in the Coalition are eager to have representation on the panel.

"We've done considerable research," Evans said. "If the Mayor wants such a committee, he should get experienced people."

By putting no limit on the amount of money that is suspect, the Coalition would also seek a full financial disclosure by the elected official.

Vargo said, "The public seems to want that (full disclosure). When we first approached them on the issue, most of the council members thought it was too rigid."

Residents crack down on Croatan rowdiness

By Lee Cahill

City Council Reporter

Increasing problems with large groups of young people who frequent Croatan Beach on weekends and holidays have led to the imposition of restrictions previously applied only to the resort strip in the Beach Borough and Little Island Park at Sandbridge.

City Council Monday afternoon unanimously approved ordinances which extend to Croatan Beach the ban on ball playing, frisbee throwing and similar activities and the taking of food or drink to the beach or adjacent streets on weekends and holidays.

Erna Rice, representing the Harbor Point, Rudee Heights and Croatan Beach civic leagues, said that passage of the ordinances is the only way to discourage large groups of people who become drunk and disorderly.

She said that many renters have stated they are not returning.

Rice said that college students occupying four houses in the 700 block of Atlantic Avenue are causing disturbances. The problem did not start until two years ago, she said.

The residents were anxious to have the ordinances in effect before the Labor Day weekend when thousands of students are expected. She said that in 1983

Council defeats garbage collection increase

In a 6-5 vote, City Council Monday afternoon defeated a proposal of twice-weekly garbage collections in the summer.

Councilman J. Henry McCoy Jr., who apparently had the impression that Council supported the plan, was obviously disappointed. He said, "This is one thing the people are going to get something for their money."

Objections were based on the cost of the program as presented by the city staff. Especially controversial was the $725,000 it would cost to renovate the Bendix Road refuse facility to handle the additional 28 trucks needed for the additional collections.

Councilwoman Barbara Henley asked whether the city had an alternative to spending the money on the garage, but the city staff maintained the need for the facility.

Members also were concerned that the public was given the wrong impression, that since Council did not contemplate raising taxes to pay for the additional service, that the service would cost nothing.

McCoy pointed out that the big expenditure was only for the initial changeover.

Henley said that she is not convinced that the city needs to move ahead with the garage and wants to see if in the Capital Improvement Program.

McCoy said he agreed the plan was a little elaborate. Creech said she could not believe the staff had inflated figures because they didn't want to be bothered with twice-a-week pick-up.

Jones agreed that the figures are not inflated, but may even be underestimated.

What keeps tourists coming back for more

By Cathy LeCompte

Editor

This is the second in a two-part series on tourism in Virginia Beach.

Promoting this city to tourists is a full-time, year round job for the Virginia Beach Tourist Division. The biggest tourist attraction is, of course, the beach itself. But other, man-made attractions, some of an historic nature, some strictly entertainment, attract the two million-plus visitors annually.

Defining something a "tourist attraction" is not easy. According to Hester Waterfield of the Tourist Division, the term is loosely defined as "something that draws people to the city." But very often, tourists can't single out a particular thing that made them choose Virginia Beach for their vacation. It is usually a combination of things for them to do and see that makes them come.

The Tourist Division puts out three brochures and is planning a fourth, to tell tourists the "Virginia Beach Story."

One is a general tourism brochure that highlights many things available in Virginia Beach and some more factual information.

Nationally acclaimed talent and new events will headline the 12th Annual Virginia Beach Neptune Festival, according to Doug Talbot, festival chairman.

Singer-actress Susan Anton will perform at the Miller High Life Stage at 24th Street on Sunday, Sept. 29. The time has not been announced.

"Susan Anton gives a stunning performance," Talbot said. To highlight the festival's theme of "magic moments," illusionist Harry Blackstone will perform the finale of the festival at the Pavilion's main hall on Sunday, Sept. 29 at 7:30 p.m.

Blackstone was named 1985 "Magician of the Year," and has given over 1,200 performances in the past seven years.

Keynote speaker for the annual Prayer Breakfast on Sept. 27 will be Dr. Jerry Falwell, leader of the Moral Majority.

Festival coordinators are expecting more than one million people to attend, and by adjusting the schedule of events, hope to make the festival a "two-weekend bonanza."

The Country Fair Day, usually slated to coincide with the Start of the Boardwalk Celebration, is now among pre-festival events on Saturday, Sept. 21.

"We had a two-fold reason for moving up Country Fair Day," said Tom Baker, event coordinator. "We figured we could get a larger audience on Saturday, for one thing. When we had the event on Friday, we maybe had four hours of daylight for family involvement. But now we'll have a nine-hour format."

The newest festival event is the Trans-Virginia Beach Canoe Race, scheduled for Sept. 21 at 10 a.m. Canoeists from many states are expected to participate in the race that will take them from Munden Point Park on the city's south end and finish at the Lesner Bridge on Shere Drive. Talbot said two Virginia Beach canoe racers are slated to compete.

"It will be interesting to see if they can win in their hometown," said Talbot.

Some of the more traditional Neptune Festival events are still on the agenda for this year.

The U.S. Navy Blue Angels will perform aerial magic on Saturday, Sept. 21, between 1 and 3:30 p.m.

Sporting events like the Sandman Triathlon and tennis tournaments are included in festival entertainment.

The Sandman Triathlon will take place on Sunday, Sept. 22 from 8 to 11 a.m. at 30th Street and Atlantic Avenue.

The final day includes, as always, Heritage Day, complete with entertainment and ethnic foods along the Boardwalk from 23rd to 27th Streets.

When Beach gets noisy, the RAAC listens

The Resort Area Advisory Commission is taking a listen to the oceanfront, and it doesn't like what it hears.

What it hears is noise—excessively loud noise in the form of music coming from the large radios or "boom boxes" some beach goers take to the boardwalk.

A group of staff members of the Resort Area Advisory Commission met Thursday night to discuss what changes, if any, it would recommend for the existing ordinances on noise on the resort strip.

"We're particularly concerned with the oceanfront," said Michael Barrett, chairman, in an interview earlier in the week.

"The staff has reviewed the various codes and we'll probably recommend adding a section about loud, excessive noise."

Some of the other proposed changes that were discussed on Thursday were to ban the radios altogether, or to require listeners to wear headphones.

Chester's obsession

Chester has stopped reading about the occult and has begun some popular psychology books. Bunnica seems healthy and happy, especially when Harold sings Bunnica a lullaby in his native tongue, spoken only in the Carpathian, or Transylvanian, Mountains.

This hilarious spoof of the vampire legends, starring a possibly vegetarian vampire, a well-meaning cat, and a well-read sheepdog, will make perfect reading for fourth through sixth grade children, and its humor will appeal to adults as well. Bunnica's fans may enjoy the sequels by James Howe: Howliday Inn and The Celery Stalks at Midnight.

Fitness seminar scheduled

Leigh Memorial Hospital, The Tidewater Striders, Optima Health Plan and several health and fitness experts have teamed up to sponsor a health, fitness and running seminar on August 24 at 6:30 p.m. at Leigh Memorial Hospital in Classrooms 1 to 4. It is free and open to the public.

Some of the area's top sports medicine people will examine the positive and negative aspects of running and the importance of health and fitness testing before and during a running program.

Two former Tidewater Strider presidents, Mel Williams, director of the Human Performance Laboratory at ODU, and Dr. Rudy Schuster, an internal medicine physician, will lead the program.

Other program participants will be: John Wareing, owner of Wareing's Gym and the fitness and testing coordinator for Virginia Beach police and fire departments; Dr. Ignacio Ripoli, a pulmonary specialist, who will conduct various lung tests including a maximum oxygen uptake test; Dr. Charles Ewing, a podiatrist looking at potential running problems from the feet up; Dr. David Young, a specialist in orthopedics and sports medicine, who will show the latest in his field; and Dr. Scott Banks, a chiropractor and an accomplished triathlete, who will use a videotape machine to study the biomechanics of running.

Cat lover speaks out

7. Dogs don't practice personal hygiene. If a dog goes out in the rain, falls into a mud puddle and comes back home, he will stay that way until "Dooms Day." In order to get the dog clean, you have to put him in a tub of water and scrub-a-dub-dub. Cats are very clean. They take a certain amount of pride in looking their best. Dogs are like some people I know—they could care less. Now, don't take all this to heart and oill out the SPCA on me. I mean this stuff in jest. I'm an animal lover, pure and simple, and have taken almost as many dogs to my heart as I have cats. With the possible exceptions of snakes and mice, I could probably deal with almost any kind of pet.

But I just couldn't stand by and let the felines be libeled without any rebuttal. So meow to you, Kate!

Seven artists featured in latest winner's show

Seven area artists will be featured in "Winners of the 1985 Members' Show", which will be on view Aug. 23 through Sept. 22 at the Virginia Beach Arts Center, 1711 Arctic Ave.

The seven artists earned Awards of Excellence at the Arts Center's Members' Show, which was held in late March at the Pavilion in Virginia Beach.

An exhibition reception will be held from 7 to 9 p.m. on Thursday, Sept. 5, in the Arts Center's main gallery. The event is free and open to the public. The artists will be in attendance for the reception.

Tighter standards affect new home buyers

Tighter underwriting standards announced by the Federal National Mortgage Association would make it much more difficult for consumers to qualify for conventional mortgages and require higher incomes for home buyers to obtain five percent downpayment loans, according to the National Association of Home Builders.

"We recognize some changes were necessary to protect the integrity of the mortgage finance system during this period of disinflation when home values are increasing at a much slower pace," said NAB President John J. Koelemij. "However, we fear that Fannie Mae may have gone too far. The new guidelines would disqualify thousands of potential buyers from the housing market."

Last year an estimated 300,000 households purchased homes with five percent downpayment conventional loans.

"While it is clear that five percent down loans are associated with higher losses, the data made available thus far does not substantiate the changes announced by Fannie Mae," Koelemij said. A secondary market lender, FNMA is the nation's largest single supplier of home mortgage funds and its underwriting guidelines tend to set the standard for the industry.

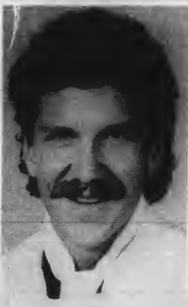

The new Fannie Mae underwriting guidelines would increase the required amount of income a borrower needs to qualify for mortgage loans with low downpayments. Loans with downpayments of less than 10 percent sold to Fannie Mae must be underwritten to 25 and 33 percent payment-to-income ratios. That means a borrower's monthly housing expenses will not be allowed to exceed 25 percent of gross monthly income. Housing expenses plus all installment debt cannot exceed 33 percent.

Selecting realtor key to homebuying

Selecting the right real estate agent to market and sell your home can facilitate a relatively smooth transfer of ownership of your property that is well worth the cost of using an agent. However, according to the Better Business Bureau, many homeowners know little about what they should expect or demand from the agent.

It is important to remember that the selection of the best possible agent could save or earn you hundreds, even thousands of dollars.

The BBB recommends that you interview at least three agents before selecting one.

Ask each agent to make a listing presentation in your home. Learn as much as you can about the agent and the broker he or she works for. Does the agent appear to be professionally competent as well as a good sales person? Do they know the market for your home and do they have a successful sales record in your neighborhood or area? How many homes do they list and how many have they sold? Do they list properties with a multiple listing service? Agents from other firms can use this master list and may bring in a buyer for your home. Multiple listing is usually a strong plus.

Ask the agent if his or her marketing plan will include: advertising (what kind and how often), open houses, multiple listing, inclusion in home tours, informing neighbors that your home is available, exploring and promoting financing options, etc. Find out who gets a commission if the home is sold (by your agent or if by another agent or broker), how much the commission will be (commissions are not set by law and are negotiable), and how long your listing contract lasts (90 days is usually long enough to size up an agent's effectiveness).

The BBB emphasizes that you should work with your agent to set a reasonable asking price. Upon your acceptance of an offer, the agent should efficiently orchestrate all the factors that go into closing the deal.

Croatian issue

1,000 showed up and in 1984, the number was increased to 2,000. "This year what?" she asked.

Rice said the residents sent letters to seven colleges pointing out that organized parties need permits from the city, but received no replies. She said that last Labor day weekend police towed away 100 illegally parked cars.

When the beachgoers leave the beach at dusk, she said, they leave behind beer cans, liquor bottles, crab shells and chicken bones as well as broken styrofoam coolers which the city has to clean up.

Rice said that large groups have been descending on the south end of the beach, some arriving by charter bus, and unloading into a residential community.

Rice said similar behavior would not be tolerated in front of the hotels while it's taking place in front of private homes which pay some of the highest real estate taxes in the city... "and it's getting worse."

She said that Croatan Beach is a public beach with no toilet facilities, no lifeguards, except for the surfing area, and the young people are totally uninhibited in behavior.

"It's difficult to legislate good manners," she said, and the only option is restriction "even though it means curtailing the innocent pleasures of other people."

Beach has many tourist attractions

"This is the one we send to get the people here," said Waterfield. "It kind of says, 'Oh isn't this a great place, don't you want to come here?'"

Another brochure, called the "Self-Guided Motor Tour," helps the tourist find things to do after he/she gets here. It comes complete with a map highlighting historic places as well as some shopping areas.

The "Accommodations Directory" helps the tourists choose hotel accommodations and a guide to sports and athletics is planned.

The Tourist Division is careful to set guidelines on the things included in the brochures. The brochures obviously can't highlight every business and the department can't appear to "play favorites," so the alternative is to choose carefully and set tough guidelines.

"You have to set that type of guideline," said Waterfield. "We try to mention the historic houses, because we think it's important to promote the history in our city. But we don't include businesses by name. We just use generic terms like amusements or shopping."

Some of the historic landmarks that the Tourist Division promotes to tourists are the Old Cape Henry Lighthouse, the First Landing Cross, Thoroughgood House and Lynnhaven House.

Virginia Beach has two facilities that have gained international prominence, and draw visitors from all over the world.

Christian Broadcasting Network and University had more than 34,000 people attend the 700 Club program last year and many more than that toured the facility.

The Association for Research and Enlightenment drew visitors interested in psychic Edgar Cayce's legend at the rate of about 40,000 per year in 1984.

Many tourists come to Virginia Beach simply to visit one or both of the facilities, said Waterfield.

The newest attraction to open at the Beach is of an entertainment nature. Wild Water Rapids (water theme park) opened in July to the delight of locals and tourists alike. The 9.5-acre park features a variety of water rides like flumes, a wave pool and slides, and cost over $6 million dollars. Park officials say its type of entertainment is unique in the area.

"We did a complete feasibility study," said William J. McCarthy, general manager of Aqua Sports, Inc., the park's parent company. "We found the beach needed some good solid family entertainment."

The park's grand opening was delayed until July, because the extremely rainy weather in June slowed construction. McCarthy said that the late opening affected the park's impact for its first season.

"If you miss a third of the season, it's obviously going to affect it," said McCarthy.

McCarthy also thinks that eventually Wild Water Rapids will take its place among the beach's legitimate tourist attractions; one that will draw people here on vacation and give them a reason to stay.

"By virtue of its existence, it gives tourists a reason to stay," he said. "You can come here repeatedly and not have the same experience every time."

The parent company is confident of the park's success; so much so that there are already plans for additional parks with different kinds of attractions.

"This is just the first part of a whole complex," said McCarthy. One of the other areas would feature motorized attractions like bumper boats and "go carts." Another would be historical in nature with different shops, and yet another would be geared toward the younger set and be a children's play park.

"Each would be a separate facility with separate charges," McCarthy said.

Wild Water Rapids will remain open until Labor Day and recently began offering nightly musical entertainment. The bands begin playing at about 5:30 p.m. and play until 10 p.m. They are still experimenting with other entertainment.

"You make of this what you want," said McCarthy. "We just provide the facilities."

Another feature about the beach that brings tourists to the city year after year, is the assorted annual festivals that take place.

The Pungo Strawberry Festival, the fireworks at Mount Trashmore, the Boardwalk Art Show, the Folk Arts Festival and the Neptune Festival are big reasons for visitors to make their way here.

The Neptune Festival is the annual summer finale, and this year, with new events, scheduled and well-known entertainers headlining it, the festival will probably draw more tourists than before.

Bush fights in controversial bout

Virginia Beach Kick-Boxer Curtiss Bush fought four time-world champion and current world lightweight champion Cliff Thomas in a bout held recently at the Peachtree Plaza Hotel in Atlanta, GA.

Bush entered the bout with a 20-3 record with 14 knockouts, while Thomas sported a 30-4 record with 17 knockouts.

Bush was awarded a unanimous win over Thomas, but the decision was later ruled a draw when judgement was made that Bush did not get in the required 8 kicks in the first round. The controversial decision resulted in a formal protest with the P.K.A. and a video-tape review of the fight will take place.

The controversial bout will be shown on ESPN cable television later this month.

Yeoman McDaniel has a way with words

Navy Yeoman First Class (YMI) Pat McDaniel, was able to raise two children, make chief petty officer, receive her master's degree and earn many awards, all in 11 years.

McDaniel, who was notified on July 11 that she was selected for chief petty officer, graduated from Golden Gate University with a master's degree on July 12 and received her second Navy Achievement Medal on July 15.

"It was a week that I'm sure will never be topped," said YNI McDaniel, who is the flag writer for Commodore G. L. Rendeau, Commander Tactical Wings Atlantic, headquartered at Naval Air Station Oceana.

When she enlisted in the Navy in 1974, McDaniel was married and had a three-year-old daughter. She found that civilian job opportunities available were not what she wanted.

"I was frustrated with what I could expect to earn and the lack of advancement opportunities," said the career Navywoman about civilian employment prospects.

At the time of her first enlistment in the Navy, Mc-Daniel requested flag writer's school. She was accepted into the school and spent six months in Indianapolis, Indiana. Since graduating, she has served two tours with Commander, Naval Surface Forces, U.S. Atlantic Fleet and on the staff of the Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff for Plans, Policy and Intelligence for the Supreme Allied Commander Atlantic, all in Norfolk, Virginia.

During her spare time she and her husband Jim have participated with and supported their daughters in basketball, bowling and softball.

"They don't like my being gone, but they support me and they're proud," said McDaniel. She has also taught typing through the Chesapeake Board of Education Adult Education program.

McDaniel leaves the Tidewater area on Sept. 1 to attend the Navy's ten-week Leadership Management, Education and Training instructor school in Millington, Tennessee. She will then continue on to Hawaii where she will serve as an instructor.

Schools to ask for $13.3 m referendum

By Lee Cahill
City Council Reporter

The School Board will ask voters to support a $13.3 million bond issue in a referendum on Nov. 5.

City Council Monday evening unanimously approved the request for the referendum by the School Board, meeting at a special session the following day to approve the referendum on second reading. The urgency was needed so that a petition and order may be prepared for presentation to the Circuit Court 60 days prior to the Nov. 5 election.

The money would be used for the renovation of Princess Anne High School ($7 million), the construction of facilities for the Handicapped ($6 million), and the purchase of an elementary school site in the West Kempsville area ($300,000).

City Manager Thomas H. Muehlenbeck recommended last week that Council consider the projects in the upcoming Capital Budget which is expected to be ready in November.

The referendum is a paired-down version of the March referendum when $30.3 million was sought for school construction.

That referendum was defeated along with the city's referendums for roads, water and sewer and city buildings. The defeat was interpreted as indicative of the displeasure of the citizens in growth and spending by the city.

Councilwoman Barbara Henley pointed out that if the referendum is not approved by voters, the schools would be in the same position as now or worse because it will have missed the budget review process. She said that she would prefer considering top priority school items in the Capital Budget.

Council voted unanimously to approve the referendum.

Board tightens spending policies

The Virginia Beach School Board made some changes in its travel and expense reimbursement guidelines last week. According to Fred G. Benham, assistant superintendent for financial services, the new School Board policy follows the state code as policy and uses the city ordinances as guidelines.

The new guidelines discourage the practice of reimbursement for noon meals inside the city and discourages the request for reimbursement of expenses not a part of a conference package. They also changed the time frame when registration fees for conferences have to be in, from one week in advance to two weeks in advance. To the travel reimbursement vouchers, the destination and purpose of the trip were added.

"It's what we've been following all along," said

Benham, "but now, as one board member put it, we have it spelled out."

At an Aug. 1 School Board meeting, Benham presented the board with a lengthy report detailing travel and expense policies used by the city, the state and the board. Then, members were reluctant to change policy. But School Board member John A. Fahey questioned whether members should be reimbursed for entertainment expenses at conferences.

In the wake of criticism for the entertainment reimbursement, two board members, Rev. B. G. Campbell and Robert Clyburn, said they would reimburse the city for entertainment they had attended while at school conventions.

The new policy was adopted with little discussion last Tuesday.

Ammons band. This year's ball will include a full course sit-down dinner, a change from last year's hors d'oeuvre offerings.

Tickets for the formal ball are on sale through festival headquarters by calling 490-1221. The cost is $60 per person.

Celebs, tourists proud to don Rubin's portraits

By Cathy LeCompte
Editor

To Diane Rubin, 31, painting portraits on T-shirts is an art. It's also a livelihood that she sometimes spends 12 hours a day working at.

Because people think her work is that good, she usually has a waiting list.

Rubin is an airbrush artist who has worked in Virginia Beach for the past five summers. This is her second summer working at T-Body's on 21st Street and Atlantic Avenue. Her fifth tourist season at the Beach is winding down and it's been her best yet.

"Last year I sold 3,000 shirts all summer," Rubin said. "This year, I've already sold 3,000 and we still have a few weeks to go."

Her work area is in the display window on the Atlantic Avenue side of the store. People walk by, and most stop to look for just a moment at Rubin's work. She has to stand, sometimes for eight or nine hours without a break.

"Sometimes I can get pretty tired," she said "I go home after a day of doing very tedious portraits and my back aches and my wrist aches."

Rubin has been airbrushing for four years. The art form itself is relatively new, and something that she had to teach herself to do. She says it takes years to really get good.

"I got into it because I was getting bored with doing faces all the time," Rubin said. "I wanted to try something new. A lot of artists who try it just give up because they'll break the very expensive equipment, and never get the right parts to fix it."

"When you're dealing with faces you're dealing with egos. People rarely see themselves the way others see them."—Rubin

But Rubin didn't give up and now many say she is one of the best and one of the only free hand airbrush portrait artists on the East Coast.

At the requests of customers, Rubin has done many celebrity portraits, especially rock stars, by working from pictures that the customers bring in, or from album covers. Now that her business has grown so, she probably has hundreds of designs to choose from. And the designs

Richie Rudolph of Cocoa Beach, Fla. walked off with the $3,000 first prize in the provision at the rain-delayed East Coast Surfing Championships, held between 12th and 14th streets this weekend.

The rains suspended competition for over two hours on Sunday, but it didn't dampen the spirits of the more than 300 surfers or the estimated 50,000 spectators of the two-day event.

The Virginia Beach Jaycees got permission from the city to hold the 1985 event at the oceanfront, the original location where it was held until 1970. It was then moved to Camp Pendleton. The United States Navy is using its portion of the beach at Pendleton this year and didn't leave enough room to accommodate the large crowds expected.

Surfing competition began at 7 a.m. both Saturday and Sunday and continued until 7 p.m. Surfing was stopped at about 2 p.m. on Sunday due to rain and lightning, and resumed at 4:30 p.m. Some 285 amateurs and 43 professionals competed.

The ECSC is often billed as "the last big party weekend of the summer." Entertainment was provided on the 13th Street stage, adding to the party atmosphere. Rock and acoustic bands headlined the entertainment for both days, as well as bikini contests and aerobics demonstrations by Empress Spa Lady.

Governor Charles Robb was in attendance to present pro Richie Rudolph with his trophy and to present the winner of the bikini contest her $50 prize.

In the pro division, Clyde Rodgers of New Smyrna Beach, Fla. took the second prize of $1,500. Virginia Beach surfers to place were Ken Hunt, fifth place, Brian Brennan, seventh place, and John Klinetop and John West tied for ninth place.

In the amateur competition, Virginia Beach surfers fared much better. Brian Macon won the men's open bodyboarding. Drew Todd won the Menhune (12 and under) competition.

Seth Brandy took the boys 13-14 title. Pete Smith won the juniors 15-17 event. And Brian Brennan took the men's 18-24 title.

In the masters division (25-34), Brian Macon came in first. The seniors (35-over) was captured by Bill Frierson.

The women's competition was won by Kim Waters of Wrightsville, N.C. Pam Brinkley-Wallace of Virginia Beach came in second.

When he wanted to find people to work in his business, he was reluctant to advertise.

The Virginia Beach Public Libraries honored the children who participated in its Summer Reading Program at a reception on Thursday evening at Bayside Library.

Dana Porter, who coordinated the reception for the libraries, said that about 300 children had signed up to participate in the program, but the libraries awarded 125 certificates to the kids that completed the required reading.

The children had to read 10 books during the summer in order to win a certificate. Even preschoolers were able to join in the activity, by having their parents read at least two books to them during the summer to become certificate recipients.

Entertainment was provided at the reception by Bob and Kay Zentz of Ramblin' Conrad's and Bob Ripple of Audio Connection. The trio performed some Scottish music, with Ripple playing the bagpipes.

The theme of the reception was Scottish in nature. Don Fraser of the Scottish Shop of Tidewater donated a number of door prizes.

The British Isles Dancers performed a few numbers Scottish country dancing. This dance group, headed by Annette Harris, recently performed at the Shakespeare-By-the-Sea Festival and have danced at Harborfest and the Neptune Festival.

Keeping the city clean

The Virginia Beach City Council narrowly defeated the proposal for twice-a-week summer garbage collection by a vote of 6-5.

Councilman J. Henry McCoy who supported the plan said that the proposal was "one thing the people are going to get something for their money."

And money, it seems, was the main reason for the proposal's defeat. The cost of renovating the Bendix Road facility to handle the extra trucks was estimated at $725,000. This expenditure was especially controversial in the majority's eyes.

The initial costs of the project were expected to be high, but the benefits of twice-weekly refuse collection would have far outweighed the cost.

With the large influx of people coming into this city during the summer months, the increase in collection was sorely needed to "keep Virginia Beach clean," as we are all asked to do by the many signs displayed throughout the city. If we want to keep the city desirable to tourists, one big step in that direction is to keep the city clean.

Health reasons also cause concern in the summer when trash is allowed to pile up and is only disposed of once a week. The tremendous heat and humidity we experience, especially late in the summer, can cause serious odor problems when garbage is left lying around.

More importantly, this was just one more issue where the council probably did not have its "ear to the ground" to find out what the citizens really wanted. It was an issue that many people considered vital to the improvement of the quality of life in Virginia Beach.—C.L.

Worthy adversaries

After numerous battles won on both sides in the past two years, the Sandbridge residents finally won the war. The eight Sandbridge property owners got the permission they needed to build bulkheads to protect their property.

The Virginia Beach Wetlands Board bent to the pressure of higher authority and voted unanimously to let the people build their bulkheads.

After the vote, Chairman C. H. Dorchester said that he hoped he wouldn't have to see the property owners again. And one of them replied in a likewise fashion.

Even though at times in the two year struggle, the fighting got bitter, it was always clear that the two sides were worthy adversaries for each other. In the political arena, that is often a rare occurrence. So many times, one opponent is out of his/her league.

But that is not the case here. Each side believed wholeheartedly that it was right. Each side believed it was doing the best thing for the most people.

And even though the "war" is over, the outcome has probably changed the principal players' opinions very little.—C.L.

To a safe holiday

The National Safety Council estimates between 450 and 550 persons may die in traffic accidents over the Labor Day weekend.

The three-day holiday period begins at 6 p.m., Friday, August 30 and concludes at midnight, Monday, September 2.

The Council also estimates between 19,000 and 23,000 persons may suffer disabling injuries from traffic accidents during the holiday period.

A total of 451 persons died and 21,000 were seriously injured in traffic accidents during a similar period in 1984.

The Council encourages you to follow these tips if you have to travel during this Labor Day weekend:

- Always wear your safety belt and encourage your passengers to do likewise. Parents should remember to place your child in an approved child safety seat.

- Don't be stubborn and insist on driving if you've had a few drinks; let someone who is sober drive. No one drives as well after a few drinks as before.

- Observe the posted speed limit and drive defensively by allowing a two-second interval between you and the car in front.

- If you are running behind schedule, don't try to make up time by exceeding the speed limit. It is better to arrive safely and a few minutes late than not to arrive at all.

Letters To The Editor

More talk on military benefits

Editor, Virginia Beach Sun:

To those who have written in to say that "military benefits should come with the ID card," I reply: Why should a woman who marries a retired military member be "identified" at all?

Of course, as we all know, the reason the military "identifies" these women who never served as military wives is in order to provide them with unearned and undeserved public benefits courtesy of the U.S. taxpayer.

Somehow I don't think that marriage to a retired military member should be a taxable event for me (the taxpayer) anymore than the marriage of any other kind of retired person; for example, a policeman or fireman.

Why should I have to help a retired military member pay for a marriage contracted after he retires? Why are taxpayer dollars wasted in this manner?

The wife who served alongside her husband earned military benefits. She has a right to them based on years of service rendered, not on a short marriage ceremony which should be of no particular concern whatsoever to the taxpayer or general public.

Newspaper recycling advocated

Editor, Virginia Beach Sun:

This letter is in response to the city plan to double trash collection next summer.

Did you know that approximately 1,000 tons of newspaper, per month, goes to the landfill in the City of Virginia Beach?

The city could promote recycling to reduce waste and adopt an ordinance to separate newspaper from trash, for recycling.

Disposal costs will continue to rise, at least doubling when the R.D.F. plant begins operation. I am sure Wade Kyle can provide a more educated assessment of the future of trash.

MacDonald's 21st mystery novel follows same suit

Rapid fans of John D. MacDonald's Travis McGee mysteries can alleviate their symptoms this year with the 21st novel in the series, THE LONELY SILVER RAIN (Knopf, 1985).

The plot centers around McGee's attempt to discover the whereabouts of a friend's stolen yacht which, in turn, leads him into the middle of the bloodiest drug war ever waged in southern Florida.

It seems that the son of one of the Florida families raped the daughter of one of the Peruvian ones before killing her, and Travis' discovery of the body makes him a prime suspect/scapegoat until he straightens everything out.

The plotting of a McGee mystery though, which sounds hopelessly melodramatic and violent in the brief synopsis above, is really just the vehicle for MacDonald to characterize one of the more interesting sleuths in the "gifted amateur" mystery tradition. This is someone outside law enforcement and licensed detective channels who can solve mysteries.

By this novel McGee is so good at it—"finding things other people have lost for half the take" might be the way he'd put it—that "amateur" is almost an inaccurate description. Travis lives on a houseboat called the Busted Flush in a Florida marina called Bahia Mar; has an economist friend named Meyer living on a boat next door who helps him with his various scams.

While the intellectual part of me long ago decided that I would loathe the real Travis McGee in person, and would probably dismiss him out of hand as a muscle-bound, sexist pig, the not-so-intellectual part of me cannot help but respond to McGee the philosopher. It is this character which instills in MacDonald fans continual devotion. One reads a Travis McGee novel, not for vicarious blood and guts, or even for vicarious erotic stimulation, although it might be argued that both can be gotten from the books, but rather for statements like:

"If someone makes a careful and sophisticated and almost foolproof attempt to kill you and they miss, it is, as Meyer announced on Sunday, two days before Christmas, a reasonable assumption they will try again."

I would say that there was not a hell of a lot of tenderness going on. We were daytime thieves, rifling a strange bedroom, looking for the treasure as quickly and quietly as possible, hearts racing, hands trembling, small cries muffled. Found it all too quickly."

Elsewhere on this page, you'll find what we think and what our columnists and cartoonists think. But what, we ask, do you think?

What do you think about our fair city? Our police department? Our schools? Downtown redevelopment? The city manager? City Council? What about the mayor, the governor, the sheriff, our delegates in the General Assembly, our representatives on Capitol Hill or, for that matter, anything else on your mind?

We want to hear from you and give you the chance to share your opinions with others. Write us a letter and tell us what you think about the world around us or about the newspaper itself. We don't care what you write about. You're entitled to your opinion, and that's what this is for—to provide a forum for your expression. Letters are best when brief (500 words or less) and typed, double-spaced. We reserve the right to edit for grammar, spelling, libelous content and when necessary, brevity. Letters must be signed, and contain address and phone number not for publication.

LeCompte's Comments

Holiday tradition

As holidays go, Labor Day is probably not traditionally one that people celebrate in a certain way every year. It's not like Christmas or Easter, where certain family events take place. Most families probably celebrate it in a casual sort of way, by picnicking or going to the beach for the last big "blowout" weekend of the summer.

Well, my family happens to be a little different. Actually, they're more than a little different, but I can save that for another column. Every Labor Day, we have the traditional LeCompte family "PING PONG" tournament. And what a great sporting event it is, too.

Everybody in the family participates, save for my sister and her husband who live in Arizona, and this year, yours truly can't be there because work responsibilities will keep me here in Virginia Beach. I'm really upset about missing it. I was going to be seeded third this year and had a fair shot at the title. But alas, they must go on without me.

The tradition has been going on for quite a few years now. I even used to come home from college to play in the tournament. As people in the family add spouses or boyfriends and girlfriends, and the little kids grow up, the playing roster gets bigger. My nephew was in charge of scheduling the matches this year. There is always a lot of arguing at that time.

My brothers don't want to play each other in the first round, because neither wants to end up in the losers bracket right off the bat. They both always want to humiliate a lesser player early on to give themselves an ego boost. In previous years, when my brother Michael was making up the schedule, he gave himself a "by" until the championship match, just because he was defending champ. We tried to convince him that this was totally unfair, but when he's making up the rules, there's no convincing him.

My mom is always unanimously voted "grand Poo-bah" for the event. This is an honorary title that we borrowed from the Flintstones cartoon. It just means that she sets the playing rules like no gloating, and she gets to make the decision on all close calls. And believe me there are some close calls. It's really bad though when there is a close play and the players turn around to ask her to make the call, only to find out that she wasn't paying attention. But like any good umpire, she makes the call whether she sees the play or not.

Last year on the tournament roster, my nephew misspelled my name. He added and "E", so that it read "Cathley." When it came my turn to take on an opponent, my name was announced as "Cat-hey!" We often pretend that we have fans watching us by making crowd noises. So I had my fans chant "Cat-hey, Cat-hey" to try and distract my opponent. It must have done the trick because, if I remember correctly, I won a couple of matches.

From the last report on the schedule, there are no glaring mismatches this year, so it will be more enjoyable for everyone.

I don't know if they'll get someone to take my place or if they'll make someone else drop out or what. I'm going to miss it and I want them to know that I'm thinking about them. I'm sure things will go much the same as previous years.

Everyone who loses will have and excuse like "my paddle was too slippery," or "the bugs got in my eyes." And the winner will prance around the table under the carport, with fists held high overhead, and the crowd going wild!

BBB's suggestions make job search easier

Finding a new or better job requires a certain amount of effort. Persons who don't have the time or energy to conduct a thorough job search often turn for assistance to a variety of employment services.

While the Better Business Bureau reports that most employment services are reliable, reputable and provide real services, a few have been found to use questionable business tactics, bilking both employers and would-be employees of their money, time and effort.

There are many kinds of employment services. They include:

- Private personnel placement services which match job seekers with employers
- Temporary help services which usually hire employees out to businesses with temporary help needs
- Retained search firms which are employed by businesses to screen prospective employees for specific jobs

- Executive counseling services which help job seekers with career decisions and job search skills (not necessarily obtaining interviews or jobs)

- Public employment services which list a wide range of jobs at government organizations, or businesses working on government contracts.

It is important to select the best employment service and counselor for you. Many firms now specialize in occupation areas or industries. Ask friends and business acquaintances for recommendations. Be wary of a counselor who is pessimistic about your chances for landing the position you want and tries to talk you into seeking a lesser job. But at the same time be realistic about your skills or employability.

Better Business Bureau answers many inquiries

The 168 U.S. Better Business Bureau offices handled over 8 million consumer inquiries and complaints during 1984. This is up from 7.8 million in 1983, according to the Council of Better Business Bureaus.

Most of the requests, about 7 in 10, were pre-purchase inquiries from consumers checking out the reliability of a business before buying the product.

About 26 percent or 2.1 million requests were from consumers with complaints about products or service. Products ordered from home using catalogs or magazine ads, generated most of the complaints.

The Council of Better Business Bureaus and the 168 local BBBs are sponsored by business in the interest of better business/consumer relations.

Realty's coloring book helps kids on the move

Rose & Krueh Realty Corp. recently added to their relocation package a colorful book aimed at the younger set.

Realizing that relocating families have needs which extend far beyond just finding a home, the coloring book, entitled "Kid Stuff," attempts to help the children look forward to moving to Tidewater.

"Kid Stuff" is a collection of drawings prepared by the students of Old Donation Center for the Gifted and Talented. In a contest sponsored by Rose & Krueh earlier this year, over 80 drawings were submitted by 4th, 5th and 6th grade students in the school through the cooperation of Stephanie Runyan, Instructional Specialist for Virginia Beach Public Schools. The pictures illustrate fun time activities in and around Tidewater. Each picture is captioned with an informative message giving a little background about the area.

Anyone with friends or relatives moving into the area can request a copy by calling the Relocation Department at 499-9191.

Rubin takes her work seriously

"A reporter once asked me what my ultimate goal as an artist was and I told him 'to hang in museums like any other artist.' And he said, 'You're not going to get there on T-shirts.' And he's right."

"Portrait artists are the most criticized and least respected," she said. "I think it's very difficult to become a good portrait artist, but I think I am and that's why I'm a better airbrush artist." The "rock star" portraits are among her most popular, and through friends at Whisper Concerts, Rubin has managed to have a couple shirts autographed by the stars who's likeness the shirt bears, Madonna, Bryan Adams and Rick Ocasek of The Cars have all signed shirts. She got to get the Ocasek signature in person.

"I took one night off last summer to go to The Cars concert," she said. "I wore a dress with an airbrush portrait of Rick Ocasek on it. Our seats were pretty far away, but Ocasek managed to spot me in the audience and had his manager come get me and my friend and take us back stage. He put in an order for a portrait of himself on a T-shirt."

Men in the military are also big customers for Rubin. They have portraits of their girlfriends done, or pictures of their customized cars and motorcycles. And sometimes they make strange requests.

"I guess I have T-shirts on every ship in the Navy," she said, smiling. "A guy came in recently and put in an order and reserved a time, but he hasn't shown up. He wanted a portrait on the seat of his underwear. He said he was even going to buy a new pair for the occasion."

Rubin says she would rather do a live portrait than work from a picture, but most people don't want to sit still for the 30 minutes it takes. Working from a photo, it takes her about 45 minutes. Most people think it would be the other way around.

"The reason the photo takes longer is because the photo already distorts the image," she said. "So in doing a portrait, I have to try to get the image back to the way it was."

Rubin thinks that another reason many artists, especially airbrush artists, avoid portraiture is because people don't think the portraits look like them.

"When you're dealing with faces, you're dealing with egos," said Rubin. "People rarely see themselves the way others see them. I try to do a fast, accurate and flattering portrait. But it's still my impression of the person. They may not think it looks like them. The real test is what other people say."

The season is slowing down now, and in October, Rubin will go back to Maryland, near Washington, D.C., to work in malls doing her portraits. She doesn't really mind that the business will start to slack off now.

"It wouldn't bother me, so I could have time to do other things. If I advertised in the right places, I'm sure I could get more mailout business."

A customer has just come into the store and requested a Chinese dragon.

"Just have fun with it," the customer says to Rubin.

"Now that's the kind of customer I like," she says.

School bond

Dr. Roy Woods, School Board chairman assured Vice Mayor Reba McClanan that the money would be used exactly for what the Board said it will be used for. McClanan added that provision to the approval for the referendum.

Woods said that the city manager said that money was not forthcoming from the city surplus or other sources; that left only the referendum, he said.

Muehlenbeck last week had listed three alternatives to raise some of the funds from various sources which he listed, to consider the schools in the budget process and to have a referendum.

Woods said the School Board expects the referendum to pass. He said that "planning has never been a problem with the School Board. Funding has been the problem."

Rae LeSesne questioned why the schools were allowed to fall so far behind. He said that 200 portable classrooms are being used. He said that schools were being sacrificed to the "Great God growth."

Physicians lend support to Veterans Memorial

Two prominent Norfolk physicians have called upon their fellow doctors to take the lead in supporting a Tidewater Veterans Memorial as proposed by the Virginia Beach Veterans Memorial Committee, Inc.

Dr. Michael J. Soltau, a pediatrician on the staff of the Children's Hospital of the King's Daughters and Dr. Joseph Mullen, a prominent physician and surgeon, who is also Director of Surgery Education at DePaul's Hospital, have addressed a letter to almost one thousand physicians in the Tidewater area.

The letter states, in part, "Many of us are veterans, and certainly our lives daily are touched in our profession by veterans as patients, staff at hospitals and offices, and in our personal lives as well. Because we physicians have a prominent role in the Tidewater community, we are looked to for leadership in this most worthy, memorial project."

Along with the letter was a brochure containing the purpose of the project and the estimated cost.

With the letter, the physicians hoped to solicit tax deductible contributions to the planned Virginia Beach Veterans Memorial, to be located on 19th Street, across from the Pavilion.

Commander G. L. Riendeau, Commander Tactical Wings Atlantic, presented the award to Captain L. F. Norton, Commanding Officer of NAS Oceana, on behalf of the Secretary of the Navy at recent ceremonies.

Singing telegram business is old one

singer on the New Spirit. He enjoys the performing he does in both jobs.

They have some standard characters that are available like Wonder Woman or Tillie the Clown. Usually, a certain person specializes in specific characters.

"I want to have a certain person be Wonder Woman. It's never come up where the same character has to be at two different places at the same time. We try to work the time schedules out for everyone," West said.

And if you have a special character in mind, one that they don't normally do, they'll try to get a costume together.

"We had a call for a bag lady and Madonna," West said. "If somebody wants someone special, we try to do it. I can usually get a hold of a costume." Sometimes, the songs they use are just the traditional "Happy Birthday" or "Happy Anniversary." But if a custom tailored song is more appropriate, they can write one up.

"We use the standard tune and change the words," he said. "If they have a special song that they want new lyrics to, as long as we know the song, we'll write the words to it."

The singing telegram business is an old one, going back to the traditional bell hop who comes to your door, plays a middle C on a tiny harmonica and sings a concocted message to a highly embarrassed "victim." But the singing telegram business in this area is relatively new just in the past eight years.

But West says, the business is evolving and changing.

"The costumes are different now. We have different characters that can really make a special impression."

West bases his prices on the cost of the costume and the time it takes the person to get into the character. The gorilla, the clown and Wonder Woman are among the most expensive.

Not only will Artistic Tunes and Balloons do spur of the moment occasions, they will also help a client plan a whole party. They can provide an unsuspecting "victim" with a fan club. Three avid fans will come to the scene, waving signs and rushing up for autograph signings.

West says he enjoys his work because each time he dons a costume, and goes out to sing a telegram or deliver balloons, it is a different experience, and no two people react the same.

"People react so differently," he said. "Some people will run and hide. Others cry because they're so happy. Most people say it's something they'll never forget."

West's company works closely with another telegram company, Merry Music Moments. When one can't take on a job, they'll send the business to the other one.

"This way we both benefit, and the customer doesn't miss out," he said.

Blue Angels to soar at oceanfront show

Two air shows featuring the Blue Angels Navy Flight Demonstration Team are slated for Virginia Beach the third weekend in September.

Both Saturday and Sunday events are preceded with hour-long concerts by the Commander-in-Chief U.S. Atlantic Fleet (CINCLANTFLT) Band. The Saturday concert will be conducted at the Norwegian Lady Plaza at 25th Street on the oceanfront. On Sunday, the concert will be held on the flight line at NAS Oceana.

Also planned for Saturday's event will be a search and rescue demonstration by the NAS Oceana Search and Rescue Team aboard an SH-3G helicopter, and a flight demonstration by Dwight Cross Jr. flying a Pitt Special high-performance aerobatic aircraft.

Tidewater Regional Transit is establishing a special, round-trip bus service from Lynnhaven Mall to the air show and back with plenty of free parking being provided at the originating location. The buses will travel to and from the NAS Oceana Air Show by a special light-traffic route designed for easy access to the events. Advance bus tickets will be on sale at most military Special Services locations throughout Tidewater, or tickets may be purchased on board.

Both gates will be opened to vehicular traffic at NAS Oceana from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Sunday, Sept. 22.

Many veterans unaware of their benefit eligibility

Although over $26 billion was paid out in veterans benefits last year, billions more went unclaimed in the past few years. Every year eligibility for benefits and the array of available benefits are changed and very few veterans or their survivors keep up with the latest rules. Because of this, and changes in their circumstances, many veterans, their families and survivors are now entitled to money and other benefits from the government even though they were not eligible in the past.

These were the findings of a study group of the Consumer Education Research Center, a 16-year-old national non-profit consumer group. They found that over one-fourth of the money paid in veterans benefits goes to persons who never served in the armed forces of the United States. Most of these were related by blood or marriage to veterans, but many were not. Others were members of the armed forces of countries who fought with us against our enemies.

Each year the Center compiles a book describing the latest rules on available benefits and how to qualify for those benefits.

The 1985-86 edition of "Complete Guide to Government Benefits For Veterans, Their Families And Survivors" has just been issued. It is available for $6 (including postage) from CCE Veterans Project, 439 Clark Street, South Orange, NJ 07079.

Robert L. Berko, executive director of the consumer group, says that many survivors of veterans are unaware that they might be eligible to receive money, medical care, educational assistance, help in buying a home or other benefits. In fact, eligibility and benefits change constantly and some people ineligible in previous years are now able to start receiving money.

The study found that many people are unaware that they are considered dependents or survivors of veterans. These include those involved in illegal marriages, those who remarried before the death or disability of a veteran, children born out of wedlock to a veteran, parents of a veteran and even adopted grandchildren. Any of these may be eligible for benefits. Berko says that the study questioned veterans about benefits and found that most were unfamiliar with most of the benefits now being granted under Federal laws. Even veterans now collecting were unaware of other benefits for which they were eligible and could be collecting.

For instance, disabled veterans can receive apparel allowances if they use wheel chairs, artificial limbs or any prosthetic device that can wear or damage clothing and, if they have a spouse in need of care, they can receive an allowance to pay someone to provide that care.

The consumer group discovered that very few ex-GIs knew they could, in many cases, get dental treatment for non-service problems.

Few knew that (unemployed veterans) 65 or older are considered, permanently and totally disabled and can collect up to $9,132. The amount increases $968 for each dependent child.

Other benefits the consumer found that were little known are:

A veteran (or dependent) can receive up to $837 (40% in advance) if he or she will assist the VA in a work-study program.

Federal agencies are required to establish affirmative motion plans to facilitate employment and advancement of veterans with any degree of disability.

Families of veterans buried or mentioned or commemorated on Tablets of the Missing overseas are eligible for free passports.

In addition the book includes a complete list of VA facilities and information to help secure the information needed with VA applications. It has a complete listing of where to write for records of births, deaths, marriages and divorces for every state and the prices charged. Sample letters are included to insure that the applicant includes all information necessary to get these documents.
